QUESTION PRESENTED

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 forbids “discrimination [on the basis of disability] under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.” Where a recipient establishes a number of subsidiary programs, does section 504 forbid discrimination in the recipient’s covered actions as a whole, or only discrimination within each such subsidiary recipient program considered separately?

PARTIES

The petitioners are Scot Hollonbeck, Jose Antonio Iniguez and Jacob Walter Jung Ho Heilveil.

Respondent United States Olympic Committee is a federally chartered corporation.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The decision of the court of appeals was entered on January 16, 2008. A timely petition for rehearing was denied on February 25, 2008. This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTES AND REGULATION INVOLVED

29 U.S.C. § 794(a), originally enacted as section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, provides in pertinent part:

No otherwise qualified individual with a disability . . . shall, solely by reason of her or his disability, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. . . .

29 U.S.C. § 794(b), originally enacted as part of the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1987, provides in pertinent part:

“Program or activity” defined

For the purposes of this section, the term “program or activity” means all of the operations of –

(3)(A) an entire corporation, . . .

(i) if assistance is extended to such corporation . . . as a whole

36 U.S.C. § 220503(4), which established the purposes of the federally chartered United States Olympic Committee (“USOC”), states that one of those purposes is to obtain for the United States, directly or by delegation to the appropriate national governing body, the most competent amateur representation possible in each event of the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and Pan-American Games.

36 U.S.C. § 220505(c), which establishes the authority of the United States Olympic Committee, states in pertinent part:

The corporation may – organize, finance, and control the representation of the United States in the competitions and events of the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and the Pan-American Games. . . .

28 C.F.R. § 41.51(b), a provision of the Department of Justice coordinating regulation governing section 504, provides in pertinent part:

(1) A recipient, in providing any aid, benefit, or service, may not, directly or through contractual, licensing, or other arrangements, on the basis of handicap:

(i) Deny a qualified handicapped person the opportunity to participate in or benefit from the aid, benefit, or service;

(ii) Afford a qualified handicapped person an opportunity to participate in or benefit from the aid, benefit, or service that is not equal to that afforded others:

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The United States Olympic Committee (“USOC”) is a federally chartered corporation charged by Congress with responsibility for overseeing and supporting participation by American athletes in the Olympics, the Pan-American Games, and the Paralympics. Because the USOC has received federal financial assistance, it is subject to the requirements of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which forbids disability-based “discrimination under any program or activity receiving [such assistance].” The district court concluded that the USOC “relegates Paralympians to second class status in the quantity and quality of benefits and support they receive from the USOC.” (App. 47a).

A divided panel of the Tenth Circuit nonetheless upheld as entirely lawful the USOC’s treatment of the disabled athletes who comprise the United States Paralympic team. (App. 5a-15a). Judge Holloway dissented, objecting that “[w]hat the statute forbids is exactly what has occurred and is occurring here.” (App. 15a). Six members of the Tenth Circuit concluded that the case was sufficiently important to warrant rehearing en banc, but en banc rehearing was rejected on a 6-6 tie vote. (App. 72a-73a).

The Paralympic, Olympic and Pan-American Games

In 1950, Congress chartered what is now the USOC to organize and promote United States' participation in international Olympic competition. In 1978, Congress enacted the Amateur Sports Act, which gave the USOC broad responsibility for coordinating amateur athletics, and expanded its mandate to include coordinating and supporting United States participation in the Pan-American Games. In 1998, the responsibilities and authority of the USOC were again increased, this time to include overseeing and supporting participation in the Paralympic Games. (App. 27a-28a).¹

The Paralympic Games are held immediately after the Olympic Games in the same host city and involve between 1,100 and 4,000 athletes. (App. 4a). The Paralympics provides competition for elite athletes belonging to six different disability groups: amputee, cerebral palsy, visual impairment, spinal cord injuries, intellectual disability, and certain others. (App. 43a-44a n.11). Many of the events at the Paralympics are the same as the competitions at the Olympics; the discus, javelin, shot, bow and arrow and other equipment used are the same at both events. Paralympic competitions are as physically demanding as competitions in the other Games; the Paralympic marathon, for example, certainly takes more strength and endurance than the Pan-American Games sport of bowling.

The plaintiffs in this action are elite Paralympic athletes who have competed in at least one Paralympic Games. All three have disabilities that cause them to use wheelchairs for mobility, and all compete as wheelchair racers. Petitioner Hollonbeck has won two gold medals and three silver medals and fifteen wheelchair marathons, and has held three United States and two World Records. At the 1992, 1996, and 2000 Olympics, at which wheelchair racing was an exhibition event conducted under the auspices of the International Olympic Committee, Hollonbeck competed on behalf of the United States. The USOC, however, would not permit Hollonbeck to participate with the United States team during the opening ceremonies, although wheelchair racers from other nations participated with their own teams. (JA 305-08).

The complaint alleges, and the USOC did not deny, that the USOC has a policy of denying to Paralympic athletes many of the benefits that are provided to participants in, or athletes preparing for, the Olympic and the Pan-American Games, and in some instances a policy of providing Paralympic athletes with inferior forms of those benefit. All of the Paralympians denied benefits, or accorded only inferior benefits, are disabled. Virtually all of the Olympic and Pan-American athletes who do receive those benefits (or who receive the more generous benefits) are able-bodied. The USOC has been able to identify only two disabled athletes in the last century of Olympic competition who were members of a United States Olympic Team, one in 1906 and one in 2000.² The USOC has not identified a single disabled individual who has ever received benefits under the Basic Plus Grants, the Tuition Grants, or Operation Gold. The facts³ regarding the nature of the discriminatory policies were essentially undisputed.

There are four principal benefits which the USOC provides to Olympic and Pan-American athletes but denies to Paralympic athletes. Athletes training for the Olympic or Pan-American Games can obtain these benefits even though those athletes have not yet been and may never be selected for those teams; conversely, even Paralympic athletes who are chosen as members of the United States Paralympic Team, including those who win medals, cannot receive any of these four benefits. Basic Grants and Basic Plus Grants are cash payments made directly (and only) to Olympic and Pan-American Game athletes. These grants are important because they permit recipients to train full time for the Olympic and Pan-American Games; Paralympic athletes generally have to hold regular jobs and can train only in their spare time. Between 1997 and 2000 the USOC provided $26 million in such grants; none of those funds were paid to Paralympic athletes. The USOC Tuition Assistance Program makes payments to an athlete's college or university; Paralympic athletes are ineligible for those benefits. The USOC offers certain athletes an Elite Athlete Health Insurance Program; enjoyment of that benefit is limited as well to Olympic and Pan-American Games athletes.

² Those athletes were George Eyser, a 1906 gymnast, and Marla Runyan, a 2000 runner. The USOC was able to identify only two other disabled athletes who had ever competed in the Olympics: Neroli Fairhall from New Zealand and Terence Parkin from South Africa. Brief for Appellee, p. 21.

There are two USOC programs under which Paralympic athletes received inferior benefits. The USOC has a program denoted "Operation Gold," under which substantial cash awards are made directly to athletes who win medals. Prior to 2000, only Olympic and Pan-American Game athletes received these payments. Since 2000, Paralympic medal winners receive cash awards under Operation Gold, but the benefits they receive are far smaller than those paid to Olympic medalists. Medalists at the Paralympic Games are paid awards about one-tenth the size of awards to Olympic medalists. (App. 35a-36a n.7). The USOC operates a number of USOC sports training centers. (JA 304). Use of these facilities is allocated on a priority basis. Olympic athletes get the first priority; Pan-American Games athletes get the second priority. Paralympic athletes can use the training facility only when no Olympic or Pan-American Game athlete wants to do so.

The USOC, and the courts below, referred to all of these discriminatory programs as the Athlete Support Programs.

The Proceedings Below

The complaint was filed in July 2003 in the District Court for the District of Colorado. The USOC does not dispute that it has received federal financial assistance, and thus is subject to the provisions of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, which forbid discrimination on the basis of disability.⁴ In the litigation in the courts below, plaintiffs argued only that the level of benefits for the Paralympic athletes had to be “equitable” or in some sense “proportionate,” not that they must invariably be identical to the benefits for Olympic and Pan-American Games athletes. (App. 36a).⁵ The USOC insisted that under section 504

Petitioners also alleged claims under the Americans With Disabilities Act; those contentions were rejected by the district court, and were not pursued on appeal. (App. 5a.).

⁵ At the oral argument in the district court, counsel for plaintiffs reassured the court that the plaintiffs were not “demanding exactly the same thing” that was provided to Olympic and Pan-American Game athletes. (JA 449; see id. (benefits need not be “perfect[ly] identical”). Counsel indicated the plaintiffs were asking only that the USOC benefits be “allocat[ed] fairly.” (Id.).

it is free to deny Paralympic athletes any benefits whatever.

In October 2003, the USOC moved under Rule 12(b)(6) to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted.⁶ The USOC contended, and the Tenth Circuit ultimately held, that section 504 permits the USOC to deny the disputed benefits to Paralympic athletes regardless of the USOC's motive for doing so, and regardless of whether doing so advances, interferes with, or has no impact at all on the USOC's statutory responsibilities.

⁶ USOC contends, in arguments of counsel, that the inferior treatment accorded to Paralympic athletes was not motivated by any discriminatory or invidious purpose. Counsel for the USOC has argued at various times that there are five reasons why it needs to give preferential benefits to Olympic and Pan-American Game athletes: (a) greater benefits are needed to provide incentives for American athletes to seek to take part in the Olympics; (b) the grants and health insurance programs would be inefficient if Paralympic athletes were included; (c) the Olympic Team would be "strapped for cash" if Paralympic athletes got any of these benefits; (d) training for an Olympic competition is more expensive than training for the same event at the Paralympics; and (e) the Paralympic athletes were already winning so many medals without benefits that the Olympic Team needed the help more. Brief for Appellees, p. 53; Response to the Petition for Rehearing and Rehearing En Banc, p. 2; JA 487. The USOC did not, however, seek summary judgment regarding these contentions, or proffer affidavits or documentary material in support of them. Such a summary judgment motion would have raised a range of factual issues and could not have been filed until the completion of discovery.

The district court recognized that the actions of the USOC “relegate[] Paralympians to second class status in the quantity and quality of the benefits and support they receive from the USOC.” (App. 47a). It nonetheless concluded that those disparities were lawful under section 504 without regard to the purpose or possible factual justification for such disparities. The court reasoned that under section 504 each of the Athlete Support Programs, as well as USOC activities regarding the Olympic, Pan-American and Paralympic Games, all “are separate programs across which differences in allocation are not discriminatory for the purposes of federal civil rights legislation because they are not comparable.” (App. 38a). Because under the district court’s interpretation of section 504 each of these functions was to be analyzed as a “separate program[],” that court concluded that the eligibility requirements for the various disputed USOC benefits – requirements which barred Paralympic athletes from the most important USOC benefits – were “beyond the reach of the . . . Rehabilitation Act.” (App. 46a).

The central issue in the court of appeals was the meaning of the phrase “program or activity” in the section 504 prohibition against discrimination “under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.” Although section 504(b) defines “program or activity” to mean “all of the operations” of a recipient, the majority held that in the phrase “discrimination under any program or activity” the term “program” refers not to the recipient’s actions “as a whole,” but rather to each separate subsidiary program created or operated by the recipient. (App. 10a). “The relevant universe for analysis under § 504 is the individual programs under the USOC’s umbrella.” (Id.). Under this interpretation of section 504, the court of appeals insisted, courts must examine separately, and can examine only, the actions within each distinct subsidiary program that a recipient has created.

The Tenth Circuit regarded this interpretation of section 504 as fatal to all of plaintiffs’ claims. First, because, on the majority’s view, the Olympics, the Pan-American Games and the Paralympics are distinct “programs” within the meaning of section 504, the Rehabilitation Act simply does not apply to USOC decisions to withhold from athletes training for or competing in the Paralympics benefits that are provided to athletes training for or competing in the Olympics or Pan-American Games. Decisions about the allocation of benefits among these separate groups of athletes are not decisions (and thus could not be discrimination) “under” a program. The Tenth Circuit did not hold that the USOC’s actions were not discriminatory; rather, it construed section 504 as providing that these types of decisions – discriminatory or not – are not actions “under [a] program . . . receiving [f]ederal financial assistance” at all.

Second, the Tenth Circuit reasoned that the eligibility requirement that a recipient creates for a particular recipient program is not subject to scrutiny under section 504. Such an eligibility requirement, the court reasoned, merely defines the contours of the recipient’s program, and cannot therefore be action within or under that program. “[C]ourts are not free to rewrite eligibility requirements” for a recipient program because doing so would “alter[] the nature of the program.” (App. 13a). Thus section 504 simply did not apply to the USOC’s decision to declare Paralympians ineligible for most of the Athlete Support Programs, regardless of why the USOC had made that decision.

Judge Holloway, in a dissenting opinion, agreed with the majority that “resolution of these appeals turns on whether the USOC is operating one ‘program’ or separate programs, one for the disabled and one for the able-bodied.” (App. 16a).⁷ Judge Holloway insisted that the definition of “program or activity” under section 504 is controlled by section 504(b), which states:

For the purposes of this section, the term “program or activity” means all of the operations of . . . an entire corporation . . . if assistance is extended to such corporation . . . as a whole.

29 U.S.C. § 794(b). He argued that under section 504 “‘all the operations of’ the covered entity” are a single program. (App. 16a) (quoting 29 U.S.C. § 794(b)). On this interpretation of section 504, he concluded, the disputed decisions were subject to scrutiny under the Rehabilitation Act. Applying that definition of “program or activity,” Judge Holloway readily concluded that an arrangement under which specific valuable benefits are provided only to Olympic and Pan-American athletes (virtually all of them able-bodied), and are denied to every Paralympic athlete (all of whom are disabled), constitutes disability-based discrimination. (App. 18a).

Petitioners sought rehearing and rehearing en banc. The panel denied the petition for rehearing by a vote of 2-1; Judge Holloway would have granted the petition. Petitioners also sought rehearing en banc. Judges Henry, Briscoe, Lucero, Murphy, Hartz and O’Brien voted to grant rehearing en banc. (App. 72a-73a). Judge Holloway, who had voted to grant rehearing by the panel, was not eligible to vote on the petition for rehearing en banc because he held senior status.⁸ Six active members of the court of appeals opposed rehearing en banc. The petition for rehearing en banc was thus denied by a 6-6 tie vote.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRITI. THE TENTH CIRCUIT HAS DECIDED AN IMPORTANT QUESTION OF FEDERAL CIVIL RIGHTS LAW THAT SHOULD BE SETTLED BY THIS COURT

For more than four decades, prohibitions against discrimination by entities receiving federal funds have been an essential element of national civil rights policy. Today there are twenty-nine federal laws, including in the instant case section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, which in essentially identical terms forbid “discrimination under” a “program or activity” receiving federal financial assistance.⁹ The anti-discrimination statutes framed in these terms prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, national origin, sex, pregnancy, age, religion, creed, political affiliation or belief, and disability.

The decision of the Tenth Circuit in the instant case substantially limits the protections of these laws, carving out a set of potentially discriminatory decisions which are immune from scrutiny under section 504. Six members of the Tenth Circuit, correctly recognizing that the issue in this case is one of “exceptional public importance,” Tenth Circuit Rule 35.1(A), voted for rehearing en banc.

⁹ A list of those statutes is set forth in an appendix to this petition.

Section 504, like numerous other federal laws, forbids discrimination “under any program or activity” receiving federal financial assistance. Most recipients of federal assistance, like the respondent USOC, engage in a range of functions and set up a variety of subsidiary programs. The question presented, and of potential importance to all of these statutes, is whether those laws apply only to decisions made within each of those distinct subsidiary recipient-created programs, or more broadly forbid discrimination in a recipient’s operations “as a whole.”¹⁰

The definition of “program” under section 504 (and other, identically worded federal statutes) is of considerable importance because it determines the nature of the anti-discrimination prohibition. Section 504 forbids only discrimination “under” a federally assisted “program.” If a recipient’s various separate functions each constitute distinct “program[s]” within the meaning of section 504, the Rehabilitation Act would indeed prohibit only discrimination within each such subsidiary program.

The decision of the Tenth Circuit, construing “program” to mean “recipient program,” expressly excludes from “analysis” (App. 10a) or scrutiny under section 504 two important – and potentially discriminatory – types of actions by a recipient of federal financial assistance. (App. 11a). First, because on the Tenth Circuit’s view section 504 forbids only discrimination within a particular recipient-created program, section 504 would not apply to discrimination by a recipient in the allocation of a benefit between two or more programs. If a recipient operated or organized its beneficiaries into two programs, in one of which all participants were disabled and in the other of which no participants were disabled, section 504 would not apply to the recipient’s decision to allocate resources only, or preferentially, to the latter. That would be true even where, as here, the recipient’s own actions are responsible for the composition of the two groups of program participants. Under the Tenth Circuit’s interpretation of “program or activity,” section 504 would not apply to such a decision, even though it would have a severe discriminatory effect, and regardless of whether the recipient was motivated by a discriminatory purpose.

Second, the Tenth Circuit holds that construing “program” to mean “recipient program” means that the eligibility requirements for each such program (unless facially discriminatory¹¹) also are not subject

¹¹ Under the Tenth Circuit decision a subsidiary program would violate section 504 if it imposed a facially discriminatory eligibility requirement, e.g., if the USOC established a scholarship program for “non-disabled Olympians.” (12a, 14a). The court of appeals’ view of what constituted facial discrimination was exceedingly narrow; it insisted that USOC rules are not to scrutiny or analysis under section 504. (App. 13a). On the Tenth Circuit's view, the eligibility standard is part of the essence of the program to which it controls entry, and thus cannot be scrutinized under section 504. (Id.). Thus an excluded would-be participant cannot challenge the eligibility requirement for a recipient program either on the ground that it was adopted with a discriminatory purpose, or on the ground that it has a discriminatory effect.

The circumstances of the instant case are a stark illustration of the impact and importance of whether the phrase "program or activity" in section 504 (and the other identically worded federal laws) applies only (and separately) to the conduct of such recipient subsidiary programs. The USOC provides coordination and assistance to several thousand American athletes who take part in international competitions. Virtually all of the recipients of the most valuable direct aid – grants, scholarships, and health insurance – are able-bodied; not a single Paralympian – every one of whom, by definition, is disabled – receives any such benefits. In 1997-2000 the USOC made $26 million in grants to Olympic and Pan-American Game athletes, but not a single such grant facially discriminatory when they deny benefits to Paralympians (who under the relevant governing body rules had to be disabled), while granting such benefits only to Olympic and Pan-American Game athletes (who are chosen pursuant to governing body rules under which disabled athletes, in practice, can virtually never be selected.).

to any Paralympic Games competitors. If the USOC support (or lack thereof) for the athletes for whom it has statutory responsibility is considered “as a whole” and thus constitutes a single program under section 504 (in the words of the court below, if “the relevant universe for analysis is all amateur athletes over which the USOC has responsibility”), the USOC’s actions would be a classic violation of the Rehabilitation Act absent a compelling factual showing – which the USOC has not yet attempted to make – that this extraordinary disparity is required to meet the USOC’s statutory responsibilities.

Under the Tenth Circuit’s interpretation of section 504, there would be few significant limitations on the degree or manner in which the USOC could discriminate against disabled Paralympic athletes. If the USOC support for the groups of athletes competing in the three international Games constitutes distinct programs under the Rehabilitation Act, section 504 would be virtually meaningless; it would forbid only disability-based discrimination within the Olympic Games “program” (among Olympic athletes, virtually all of whom are able-bodied), within the Pan-American Games “program” (among Pan-American athletes, virtually all of whom are able-bodied) or within the Paralympic Games “program” (among Paralympic athletes, all of whom, by definition, are disabled). Nothing in section 504 would bar the USOC, for example, from refusing to provide Paralympic athletes reimbursement for the travel and housing expenses involved in participating in the Paralympics Games or from eliminating Paralympic funding altogether.

The decision of six members of the Tenth Circuit to support rehearing en banc reflected a well-founded recognition of the importance of the panel's decision. The very nature of disabilities dictates that benefits, programs and activities for disabled individuals will frequently be provided at a different location, or in a different form, or under different auspices, than is the case for those who are not disabled. The Tenth Circuit decision permits recipients to characterize or structure those benefits as separate "programs," and then reduce or eliminate the benefits in the programs used by disabled, but not non-disabled, individuals.

Vocational training for workers who have lost their sight will be distinct from (and often at a different location than) vocational training for workers who have lost their jobs to outsourcing. The program providing medical benefits for an accident victim left paralyzed will be distinct from (and usually provided in a different unit than) the program providing benefits for the victim who suffered only scratches and bruises. Certain highly debilitating illnesses will require specialized forms of physical therapy distinct from the physical therapy non-disabled individuals may need for sprained ankles or broken arms. Pre-trial detainees or prison inmates may for security reasons be held in separate detention units.

Under the Tenth Circuit decision, those differences would permit a recipient to characterize the systems for providing benefits to the disabled as separate “programs,” and then to discriminate against the disabled would-be beneficiaries by providing them with lesser benefits, or no benefits at all. The very fact that people with disabilities must at times receive certain benefits separately would, paradoxically, permit recipients to relegate individuals in need of such programs, in the words of the district court here, to “second class status.” (App. 47a).

The decision below construing the phrase “program or activity receiving federal financial assistance” is equally applicable to all of the twenty-eight other federal laws that use that identical language. The Tenth Circuit decision did not purport to be based on any unique language in the Rehabilitation Act; the terms of that statute are indistinguishable from the other twenty-eight similar federal laws. The decision below does not rely on either the legislative history of the Rehabilitation Act, or any federal regulation construing that Act.

As this Court has repeatedly noted, section 504 was based on the similarly worded provisions of Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act,¹² which forbids discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin under any federally assisted program or activity. For that reason, section 504 and Title VI are usually construed in the same manner. Similarly, the Court has recognized that Title IX of the Education

Act Amendments of 1972,¹³ which forbids gender-based discrimination under federally assisted education programs, also derives from and is to be interpreted in light of Title VI.¹⁴

The Tenth Circuit decision opens the door to discrimination on the basis of race, color, national origin and gender in the same way in which it permits that discrimination under section 504. Within individual school districts it is common for some schools to be overwhelmingly white, and others to be overwhelmingly non-white. Under the decision below, a school district could deem particular schools to be different programs (they have different locations and staffs, and usually have different geography-based eligibility requirements); having done so, the school district's decisions to provide benefits to some schools but not others would be immune from scrutiny under Title VI. Similarly, higher education systems in the South often include one or more colleges or universities which are overwhelmingly white and others which are predominantly non-white. Under the Tenth Circuit's interpretation of "program," the largely Arline*, 480 U.S. 273, 278 n.2 (1987) (Title VI and section 504); United States Dept. of Transportation v. Paralyzed Veterans of America, 477 U.S. 597, 605 (1986) (Title VI, Title IX, and section 504); Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677, 694-95 (1979) (Title VI and Title IX).

white University of Mississippi would constitute a different program than the overwhelmingly black Jackson State University.¹⁵ If Mississippi officials were to decide to provide scholarships and medical insurance only to University of Mississippi students, the Tenth Circuit decision would immunize that decision from examination under Title VI.

The Tenth Circuit decision would have a similar impact on the effectiveness of Title IX. At many schools, for example, men are over 90% of the students in certain majors (e.g., mechanical engineering), while women constitute a similar proportion of other majors (e.g., nursing). Under the decision below, a university could decide to accord medical insurance to mechanical engineering students but not nursing students, or to give mechanical engineering students preferential status in access to library carrels or desirable student jobs. As we explain below, under the Tenth Circuit's interpretation of Title IX, a school could largely abolish women's sports by the simple expedient of permitting women to try out for all the traditional men's teams. Under the Tenth Circuit's interpretation of "program," all of these decisions would be immune from scrutiny under Title IX.

¹⁵ That would be true even though Title VI, in language identical to section 504(b), defines "program or activity" to mean "all the operations of . . . a public system of higher education." 42 U.S.C. § 2000d-4a(2)(A). It is precisely this "all operations of" language which, over Judge Holloway's dissent, the majority refused to apply in the instant case.

II. THE COURT OF APPEALS HAS DECIDED AN IMPORTANT QUESTION OF FEDERAL LAW IN A MANNER THAT CONFLICTS WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT

Judge Holloway correctly objected that the decision of the Tenth Circuit was in square conflict with this Court's decision in Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287 (1985). (App. 18a).

Under the decision below the action of the USOC in, for example, denying scholarships to Paralympic athletes, was lawful only because it was carried out in a particular manner. If the USOC had created a tuition program open to participants in all three Games, but then used a preference for Olympic and Pan-American Games athletes as a method of selection, that would have been subject to scrutiny both with regard to whether it was the result of a discriminatory motive and under the section 504 regulation forbidding use of selection "criteria . . . [t]hat have the effect of subjecting qualified handicapped persons to discrimination on the basis of handicap." 28 C.F.R. § 41.51(b)(3). Thus the USOC could have violated section 504 if it had created a tuition grant program open to Olympic, Pan-American and Paralympic athletes, but then administered that program in a biased manner – e.g., giving extra points to Olympic and Pan-American (but not Paralympic) athletes, Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 270 (2003), or reserving a fixed number of scholarships only for Olympic and Pan-American athletes and assigning the awarding of those grants to a separate committee.

Regents of Univ. of California v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265, 271, 273 n.1 (1978). A program open to all but covertly administered in a discriminatory manner could have violated section 504, even though at least some Paralympic athletes might have received some tuition grants.

Under the Tenth Circuit decision, however, the USOC was able to achieve the same result – or worse – by overtly reserving all of the tuition grants to Olympic and Pan-American athletes, and expressly declaring that very purpose of this exclusionary system was to benefit only Olympic and Pan-American athletes. As Judge Holloway correctly objected, the majority opinion exonerates the USOC for doing just what the Supreme Court instructs must not be done – defining the benefit “in a way that effectively denies otherwise qualified handicapped individuals the meaningful access to which they are entitled. . . .” Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287, 301 (1985).

(App. 18a) (emphasis in original).

The effect of the Tenth Circuit decision is that the exclusion of Paralympic athletes may be forbidden if achieved in one way (by subjective student-by-student preferences in a tuition grant program open to all), but is permitted if a different technique is used (by declaring that Paralympic athletes simply were not eligible for those grants). Affording to a recipient the option of evading its section 504 obligations in that manner is clearly inconsistent with this Court’s decision in Grove City College v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555 (1984):

[A recipient’s] choice of administrative mechanisms, we hold, neither expands nor contracts the breadth of the “program or activity” . . . that may be regulated under Title IX.

465 U.S. at 572.

The central textual issue raised by this case (and common to Title VI, Title IX, and the Age Discrimination Act¹⁶), is that section 504(b) expressly “define[s]” “program or activity.” The relevant portion of that definition provides that [f]or the purposes of this section, the term “program or activity” means all the operations of . . . an entire corporation . . . if assistance is extended to such corporation . . . as a whole. . . .

29 U.S.C. § 794(b). The Tenth Circuit agreed that this definition controls which USOC operations (all of them) are covered by section 504. Thus in the phrase “program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance,” the court of appeals acknowledged, “program” means “all of the operations” of a recipient. (App. 13a). The Tenth Circuit insisted, however, that the section 504(b) definition did not apply to what constitutes forbidden discrimination. Thus in the phrase that delineates that prohibition, “discrimination under any program,” the court of appeals held, the term “program” means each recipient program. (App. 10a).

The fatal flaw in this distinction is that the phrases “program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance” and “discrimination under any program or activity” are not in separate subsections of section 504, or even in separate sentences. Rather, these phrases are merely slightly different excerpts from a single sentence, which states that no person shall, solely by reason of her or his disability, be . . . subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. . . .

29 U.S.C. § 794(a). The first phrase consists of the seven words beginning with the word “program,” and the second phrase consists of the six words ending with the word “activity.” The term “program” appears only once in section 504(a), yet under the Tenth Circuit that word has two very different meanings, one (from section 504(b)) insofar as that term determines which recipient operations are within the scope of section 504, and a different one (recipient program) insofar as that term delineates what practices are forbidden.

The decisions of this Court have recognized that a single statutory term could be sufficiently broad or ambiguous as to be capable of having two or more conflicting meanings. But this Court has without exception insisted that the Courts must choose between those competing interpretations. E.g., Safeco Ins. Co. of America v. Burr, 127 S. Ct. 2201, 2208 (2007) (choosing among the “many meanings” of “willfully”); Washington State Dept. of Social and Health Services v. Guardianship Estate of Keffler, 537 U.S. 371, 384 (2003) (choosing among the “many meanings” of “other legal process”); Gutierrez v. Ada, 528 U.S. 250, 256 (2000) (choosing among the “many meanings” of “any election”); Babbitt v. Sweet Home Chapter of Community for a Greater Oregon, 515 U.S. 687, 711 (1995) (choosing among the “many meanings” of “direct.”)

III. THE DECISION OF THE TENTH CIRCUIT IS IN CONFLICT WITH THE DECISIONS OF SEVERAL COURTS OF APPEALS

In Rodde v. Bonta, 357 F.3d 988 (9th Cir. 2004), the Ninth Circuit applied the standard in Alexander v. Choate to invalidate a disparity in funding and benefits created by the differing treatment of distinct programs. The defendant county in Rodde initially operated six hospitals, five of which provided general medical services (and which were and remained open to disabled patients) and one of which provided specialized services particularly likely to be needed by patients with disabilities. Facing a budgetary crisis, the county decided to close the specialized hospital and the programs it provided. Individuals who might otherwise have gone to the closed hospital were free to seek admission to or treatment from the programs at the five remaining hospitals – that is, there was no discrimination within each remaining program – but if they required certain specialized services they would be turned away because those remaining hospitals did not provide such services. 357 F.3d at 991-92, 993, 997-98.

The Ninth Circuit held that the resulting disparity violated the holding of Alexander v. Choate.

Alexander may allow the County to step down services equally for all who rely on it for their healthcare needs, but it does not sanction the wholesale elimination of services relied upon disproportionately by the disabled because of their disabilities.

357 F.3d 997. The attempts by the court below to distinguish Rodde are entirely unpersuasive. The Tenth Circuit asserted that Rodde was distinguishable because the defendant there had cancelled the benefits in question, whereas the USOC had merely decided not to create the disputed benefits. (App. 9a-10a). It noted that the benefits at issue in Rodde had earlier been consolidated into one program; in the instant case that had not occurred because the USOC had never provided the disputed benefits in any form to Paralympic athletes. The Tenth Circuit noted that Rodde involved “the provision of health . . . services” rather than, as here, health insurance. (App. 9a). The Tenth Circuit offered no explanation of why any of these differences would be legally relevant, and none is readily imaginable.

The Tenth Circuit also suggested that Rodde was distinguishable because the hospital that the county proposed to close, and the various treatment units and wards, did not constitute a “program.” For example, on this view “Operation Gold” would be a program, but not the hospital medical unit providing actual operations (for pediatric orthopedic neuromuscular disorders). See 357 F.3d at 990. The Tenth Circuit proffered no definition of “program” that could justify such a distinction.¹⁷ The Tenth Circuit describes the defendant in Rodde as having “cancell[ed] . . . services for the disabled.” (App. 10a). But that defendant did not announce that the disabled could not have services which were open to the non-disabled; rather, in Rodde, as here, the defendant was merely proposing a facially neutral decision not to provide a benefit of particular importance to the disabled. In Rodde, however, the benefits to be withheld were in at least some instances utilized by (and thus to be withdrawn from) non-disabled individuals; in the instant case, on the other hand, only disabled individuals were affected by the disputed decision to deny benefits to the Paralympic athletes.

In Klinger v. Department of Corrections, 107 F.3d 609 (8th Cir. 1997), the Eighth Circuit did precisely what the Tenth Circuit (over Judge Holloway's dissent) refused to do in the instant case. The Eighth Circuit used the definition of "program or activity" in the 1987 Civil Rights Restoration Act – codified in 42 U.S.C. § 794(b) for the Rehabilitation Act and in 20 U.S.C. § 1687 for Title IX – to evaluate the merits of a discrimination claim. In Klinger the plaintiffs claimed that certain disparities in the education benefits accorded to male and female prisoners in the Nebraska prison system constituted sex "discrimination under [a] program or activity" receiving federal financial assistance. In deciding that claim, the Eighth Circuit compared the benefits available at the women's prison with those in "the Nebraska prison system as a whole." 107 F.3d at 615. The Eighth Circuit reasoned that a comparison with the system "as a whole" – the very mode of analysis rejected by the Tenth Circuit in the instant case – was required by the Title XI definition of "program or activity," which is identical to the definition in section 504(b) relied on by Judge Holloway. That definition requires comparison of educational opportunities for female and male prisoners within the entire system of institutions operated by a state's federally-funded correctional department or agency, taking into account the objective differences between the male and female prison populations and such penological and security considerations as are necessary to accommodate this unique context.

107 F.3d at 616.

The Tenth Circuit correctly stated the holding in Klinger. Under the reasoning in Klinger, the panel acknowledged, the USOC’s three programs should only be compared considering the significant distinctions between each program in purpose, scope, success, and all other relevant differences.

(App. 9a). Having recognized that the Eighth Circuit decision in Klinger requires a context-specific comparison of all the recipient’s operations, the Tenth Circuit opinion inexplicably refused to engage in such a comparison, in light of relevant distinctions, of the benefit levels in the USOC programs for Paralympic athletes, Olympic athletes, and Pan-American athletes. The court below neither argued that the Eighth Circuit’s requirement of such a comparison – which is what plaintiffs in the instant case had sought – was mistaken, nor suggested that the holding in Klinger could be distinguished from the dispute in the instant case.

The Tenth Circuit understood that under decades of circuit court decisions under Title IX a school could not, for example, limit scholarships to football students. Under the Tenth Circuit decision, however, a school’s football team, or football scholarships, assuredly could be treated as a separate “program.” The panel’s attempt to distinguish the entrenched interpretation of Title IX – under which all of a school’s sports activities are properly regarded as a single program – merely underlined the radical reinterpretation of “program or activity” in the decision below.

The court of appeals argued that under Title IX “separation based on gender may be necessary, thus requiring an institution-wide analysis to determine whether a Title IX violation has occurred.” (App. 10a) (emphasis added). On Tenth Circuit’s new construction of Title IX, institution-wide analysis of a school’s sports program would only be warranted where the school required separate teams based on gender. But under the Tenth Circuit decision, Title IX would be rendered largely inapplicable to a school’s sports program if the school opted to permit girls or women to try out for and (if successful) play on boys’ or men’s teams, even if in practice few girls or women might seek to do so and few of them might ever succeed. That loophole is far from hypothetical. In fact, many schools have already abandoned prohibitions against female athletes trying out for traditional boys’ or men’s teams. Under the Tenth Circuit decision, a school could effectively escape its Title IX obligations – thus be able to shift all its scholarship funds to football and men’s basketball or largely eliminate girl’s teams – by the simple expedient of declaring women and girls eligible for the traditional men’s or boys’ teams.

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, a writ of certiorari should issue to review the judgment and opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. In the alternative, the Solicitor General should be invited to file a brief expressing the views of the United States.

In these consolidated appeals, paralympic athletes appeal the district court's dismissal of their claims under § 504 of the Rehabilitation Act against the United States Olympic Committee ("USOC"). In 07-1053, Plaintiffs-Appellants Scot Hollonbeck, Jose Antonio Iniguez, and Jacob Walter Jung Ho Heilveil appeal the district court's grant of a motion to dismiss in favor of the USOC on their § 504 claim. In 07-1056, Plaintiff Mark Shepherd appeals the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the USOC on his § 504 claim. As both cases raise identical legal issues, we consolidated the cases for briefing and submission. Prior to our disposition, Mr. Shepherd and the USOC stipulated to a dismissal of the appeal in 07-1056 under Fed. R. App. P. 42(b). Our jurisdiction arises under 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we affirm.

Background

The USOC is a federally-chartered corporation that has exclusive jurisdiction over U.S. participation in three athletic competitions: the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and the Pan American Games. 36 U.S.C. §§ 220502, 220503(3)(A). Under the Ted Stevens Olympic and Amateur Sports Act (“ASA”) as amended, id. §§ 220501-220529, Congress has charged the USOC to “obtain for the United States, . . . the most competent amateur representation possible in each event of the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and the Pan-American Games.” Id. § 220503(4).

The first Paralympic Games were held in 1960. Now the Paralympic Games immediately follow the Olympic Games in the same host city and involve between 1,100 and 4,000 athletes. Plaintiffs are all elite paralympic athletes who have competed in at least one Paralympic Games. Plaintiffs are wheelchair racing paralympians. U.S. Paralympians have been very successful compared to their Olympic counterparts with 42% of the Paralympians winning medals in 2000 and 75% winning medals in 2002 (compared to 16% of Olympians winning medals in both 2000 and 2002). Aplt. App. at 241.

To achieve its mission under the ASA, the USOC provides Athlete Support Programs which include various types of grants, tuition assistance, and health insurance benefits. The criterion that the USOC uses to distribute the benefits under its Resource Allocation Policy is that the applicant must be an athlete who is eligible to represent the United States and who intend[s] to compete, if selected, in the next Olympic or Pan American Games. Id. at 110.

Plaintiffs challenge the USOC's policy of providing Athlete Support Programs only to Olympic team members, to the exclusion of Paralympic team members, as violating § 504 of the Rehabilitation Act. The district court consolidated two separate cases for oral argument which the parties and the court agreed raise identical legal issues under Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act ("ADA"), and § 504 of the Rehabilitation Act: Hollonbeck v. USOC, No. 07-1053, on a motion to dismiss; and Shepherd v. USOC, No. 07-1056, on cross-motions for summary judgment. The district court ruled for the USOC on the Title III and § 504 claims in both cases and entered final judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b) on those claims. Prior to our disposition, Mr. Shepherd and the USOC stipulated to the dismissal of the appeal in 07-1056 pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 42(b). Plaintiffs Hollonbeck, Iniguez, and Heilveil only appeal the district court's dismissal of their § 504 claims.

On appeal, Plaintiffs argue that (1) the relevant universe for analysis should be all amateur athletes over which the USOC has responsibility; (2) they are "otherwise qualified" for the Athlete Support Programs; (3) the USOC's policy discriminates against them; and (4) the USOC's policy has the effect of screening out amateur athletes with disabilities.

Discussion

We review the grant of a motion for summary judgment de novo, applying the same standard as the district court. Timmerman v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 483 F.3d 1106, 1112-13 (10th Cir. 2007). Summary judgment is appropriate if “there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). We review the grant of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss de novo as well, considering whether the complaint contains “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, ___ U.S. ___, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1974 (2007). All facts alleged in the Hollonbeck complaint are assumed to be true in reviewing the motion to dismiss. The parties stipulated to a set of facts in Shepherd for the purpose of the cross-motions for summary judgment. Aplee. Br. at 5 n. 1. Because the facts are undisputed, we consider whether Plaintiffs state a claim or whether the USOC is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act states: “No otherwise qualified individual with a disability . . . shall, solely by reason of her or his disability, be excluded from the participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. . . .” 29 U.S.C. § 794(a). A prima facie case under § 504 consists of proof that (1) plaintiff is handicapped under the Act; (2) he is “otherwise qualified” to participate in the program; (3) the program receives federal financial assistance; and (4) the program discriminates against plaintiff. Powers v.

MJB Acquisition Corp., 184 F.3d 1147, 1151 (10th Cir. 1999).

Plaintiffs first argue that the relevant universe for analysis is all amateur athletes over which the USOC has responsibility, and the district court erred in restricting its discrimination analysis to the Olympics. Plaintiffs argue that the ASA's use of the term "amateur athlete" and § 504's definition of "program or activity," in light of the history of the definition and precedent applying Title IX, compel an analysis of the USOC programs for Olympic, Pan American, and Paralympic athletes as a whole. Thus, Plaintiffs argue that we should compare the USOC's treatment of all amateur athletes, no matter the competition in which they compete.

The ASA defines "amateur athlete" to be "an athlete who meets the eligibility standards established by the national governing body or paralympic sports organization for the sport in which the athlete competes." 36 U.S.C. § 220501(b)(1). In 1998, the ASA was amended to give the USOC jurisdiction and responsibility over United States participation in the Paralympic Games in addition to the Olympic and Pan American Games. See 36 U.S.C. § 220503; S. Rep. 105-325 (1998). However, the ASA as amended does not direct the USOC's activities in any detail with respect to Olympic or Paralympic athletes other than requiring it to "obtain . . . the most competent amateur representation possible in each event" of the three competitions. 36 U.S.C. § 220503(4). The mere use of the term "amateur athlete" in the statute does not enlarge the relevant universe to include all athletes under the USOC's purview.

The cases that Plaintiffs rely upon also do not support analyzing the USOC's three programs as a whole. First, Plaintiffs rely on Klinger v. Department of Corrections, where women prisoners sued the Nebraska Department of Corrections under Title IX for failing to provide equal educational opportunities for male and female prisoners. 107 F.3d 609, 611 (8th Cir. 1997). The prisoners compared the educational opportunities available at their facility with the opportunities available at one specific male facility. Id. at 612. The court rejected the comparison holding that Title IX requires comparison of opportunities for male and female prisoners within the entire prison system taking into account the objective differences between the two populations and other relevant penological and security considerations. Id. at 615-16.

Plaintiffs' reliance on Klinger to alter § 504's definition of program or activity is misplaced.¹ The case only holds that, under Title IX, the comparison between only the female facility and one specific male facility is not meaningful. See id. 615-16. A meaningful comparison requires viewing the jails in the context of the security, penological, and size differences among the various facilities. This holding does not support Plaintiffs' theory, and the reasoning in Klinger contradicts Plaintiffs' argument. The court noted that differences in programs between jails are permissible when considering the different circumstances in each jail. See id. at 616. Thus, the case's reasoning suggests that the USOC's three programs should only be compared considering the significant distinctions between each program in purpose, scope, success, and all other relevant differences.

Plaintiffs also rely on two ADA cases to suggest an analysis of the USOC as a whole: Rodde v. Bonta, 357 F.3d 988 (9th Cir. 2004), and Concerned Parents to Save Dreher Park Center v. City of West Palm Beach, 846 F. Supp. 986 (S.D. Fla. 1994). Both cases are readily distinguishable because they involve the consolidation of services for the disabled at a single facility and then cancellation of those services. See Rodde, 357 F.3d at 998 (noting these similarities in these two cases). These cases did not involve separate programs with separate eligibility requirements – they involved the provision of health and recreation services and the cancellation of those services for the disabled on a county-wide basis. Cf. Does 1-5 v. Chandler, 83 F.3d 1150, 1155 (9th Cir. 1996) (concluding that a Hawaii general assistance program is functionally two programs – one for needy families and one for the needy disabled – and holding that “[t]he ADA does not require equivalent benefits in different programs”). Nothing in the analysis of these two cases supports a conclusion that the USOC’s programs should be analyzed as a whole.

The additional Title IX precedent cited by Plaintiffs is not applicable here because it is based on a regulatory framework unique to the Title IX context. Title IX regulations recognize that separation based on gender may be necessary thus requiring an institution-wide analysis to determine whether a Title IX violation has occurred. See e.g., 34 C.F.R. § 106.41(b), (c); Roberts v. Colo. State Bd. of Agric., 998 F.2d 824, 829-32 (10th Cir. 1993). Therefore, the relevant universe for analysis under § 504 is the individual programs under the USOC’s umbrella. Plaintiffs must show that they are otherwise qualified for the Athlete Support Programs and that the program discriminates against them.

Second, Plaintiffs argue that they are “otherwise qualified” for the Athlete Support Programs because they are amateur athletes under the ASA. A plaintiff is “otherwise qualified” under the Rehabilitation Act if he “is able to meet all of a program’s requirements in spite of his [disability].” Se. Cmty. Coll. v. Davis, 442 U.S. 397, 406 (1979). Normally, if a plaintiff is unable to meet a program's requirements, a court must consider whether reasonable modifications or accommodations may be made that do not fundamentally alter the program. See Sch. Bd. of Nassau County, Fla. v. Arline, 480 U.S. 273, 288 n. 17 (1987); Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287, 300 (1985). Plaintiffs' argument requires us to accept a premise that we already rejected, namely, that the relevant universe for analysis is all amateur athletes. In the alternative, Plaintiffs contend that the requirement of being on the Olympic team is not an "essential eligibility requirement" to qualify for the Athlete Support Programs. 28 C.F.R. § 41.32(b). Plaintiffs argue that the USOC could open the benefits to Paralympic athletes and that doing so would further the USOC's program as a whole. However, § 504 is not the vehicle to compel discretionary acts of administrators absent discrimination.

Third, Plaintiffs argue that the USOC's policy of excluding Paralympic athletes from Athlete Support Programs is both facially discriminatory and discriminatory by proxy. Even if Plaintiffs were "otherwise qualified" for the benefits, the USOC's policy does not discriminate against Plaintiffs by reason of their disability. First, Plaintiffs err in contending that the eligibility requirements for the Athlete Support Programs are intentionally discriminatory. The criterion that the USOC uses to distribute the benefits under its Resource Allocation Policy is that the athlete must be "eligible to represent the United States and . . . intend to compete, if selected, in the next Olympic or Pan American Games.” The policy, on its face, clearly does not contain an explicit requirement of not being disabled. Cf. Bangerter v. Orem City Corp., 46 F.3d 1491, 1500 (10th Cir. 1995) (considering a city zoning ordinance for group homes for the disabled that “facially single[d] out the handicapped and appl[ied] different rules to them”).

Plaintiffs also contend that the program discriminates against Paralympic athletes by proxy as the policy specifically excludes Paralympic athletes and the term “Paralympic athletes” is a proxy for amateur athletes with disabilities. The designation of “Olympic athlete” as a requirement for Athlete Support Programs is not a proxy for non-disabled athletes because there is no fit between being an Olympic athlete and not being disabled. The requirement of being an Olympic athlete is not “directed at an effect or manifestation of a handicap.” McWright v. Alexander, 982 F.2d 222, 228 (7th Cir. 1992). Thus, the requirement to be an Olympic athlete to be eligible for the Athlete Support Programs is not discriminatory to Paralympic athletes “by reason of [their] disability.” See 29 U.S.C. § 794(a).²

Fourth, Plaintiffs argue that the USOC’s policy has the effect of screening out amateur athletes with disabilities. Plaintiffs' argument appears to allege that the USOC's policy impermissibly creates a disparate impact on disabled athletes, thus violating § 504. The Supreme Court has held that disparate impact, by itself, does not state a prima facie case under § 504. Choate, 469 U.S. at 299. Rather, actionable disparate impact requires analysis of whether the individual is otherwise qualified and whether reasonable accommodations may provide meaningful access. See id. at 299-301. Plaintiffs raise no additional argument here that we do not address above.

The dissent concludes that Plaintiffs are "otherwise qualified" for the Athlete Support Program because § 504 defines "program or activity" to include "all of the operations of" a covered entity. 29 U.S.C. § 794(b). However, Congress included the phrase "all of the operations of" a covered entity in § 504 to ensure that § 504 applies to an institution as a whole once any part of the institution receives federal funds. See supra note 2; see also DeVargas v. Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Co., 911 F.2d 1377, 1384-85 (10th Cir. 1990). The phrase does not create a parity requirement across an institution's individual programs (unlike the requirements under the specialized Title IX regulations). Further, the dissent's reading of the statute would change the eligibility requirements set by the USOC – being an Olympic team member – altering the nature of the program. Courts are not free to rewrite eligibility requirements but must analyze whether a plaintiff is "otherwise qualified" against the requirements set by the covered entity.

See Davis, 442 U.S. at 413-14 (rejecting a challenge to a nursing program because the requested modifications would have fundamentally altered the purposes and eligibility requirements of the program set by the college). Courts must ask whether reasonable modifications or accommodations may be made that do not fundamentally alter the program, see Choate, 469 U.S. at 300, or whether the requirement is not an “essential eligibility requirement” to qualify for the benefits or program, 28 C.F.R. § 41.32(b).

The dissent also argues that only extending the benefits at issue to Olympic athletes “has a discriminatory effect” against Paralympic athletes. However, disparate impact, by itself, does not state a prima facie case under § 504. Choate, 469 U.S. at 299. Further, our holding clearly does not permit denying benefits on the basis of gender, as the dissent suggests, because such a classification would be facially discriminatory. Here, the classification is facially neutral and is not “directed at an effect or manifestation of a handicap” as required for proxy discrimination. McWright, 982 F.2d at 228.

We sympathize with Plaintiffs’ efforts to obtain benefits similar to those received by their Olympic counterparts. However, we cannot modify the Rehabilitation Act to reach a result in their favor absent statutory or regulatory authority to import, wholesale, Title IX regulations and precedent into § 504. See Choate, 469 U.S. at 293 n. 7. Plaintiffs should seek a remedy with the legislative or executive branches, not the courts.

AFFIRMED.

HOLLOWAY, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

I respectfully dissent. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act provides that a qualified individual with a disability may not, solely because of his disability, be “excluded from the participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. . . .” 29 U.S.C. § 794(a). What the statute forbids is exactly what has occurred and is occurring here. This defiance of plain legislative intent is crystal-clear from the congressional statement that the Paralympics are “the Olympics for disabled amateur athletes.” S. Rep. No. 105-325 at 2, 1998 WL 604018 (1998).

The issues presented.

A prima facie case under section 504 requires proof (1) that the plaintiff has a disability; (2) that plaintiff is otherwise qualified to participate in the program; (3) that the program receives federal money; and (4) that the program discriminated against the plaintiff. Powers v. MJB Acquisition Corp., 184 F.3d 1147, 1151 (10th Cir. 1999). In these appeals it is not contested that Plaintiffs have disabilities and that the USOC receives federal money.

Therefore, the questions before us are whether the Plaintiffs are “otherwise qualified” to participate in the program and whether the USOC discriminated against the Plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs are qualified to participate in the program.

Quite obviously, this court cannot answer the first question without determining what “the program” is in this case. Indeed, resolution of these appeals turns on whether the USOC is operating one “program” or separate programs, one for the disabled and one for the able-bodied. The clear answer to that question has been provided by Congress. Section 504 defines “program or activity” to include “all of the operations of” the covered entity. 29 U.S.C. § 794(b).¹ Plaintiffs are qualified to participate in the program; they are recognized as elite paralympic athletes whose competition in the Paralympic Games is, Congress has mandated, to be promoted by the USOC.

Thus, this case can and should be resolved by simple application of the plain language of the statute, and this court should reverse the judgment of the district court. The majority reaches the wrong result because its analysis goes off the track at the outset by failing to follow the statutory definition of “program.” As noted by the majority, Congress specifically amended the Rehabilitation Act and other statutes to broaden the definition of “program or activity.” Maj. op. at 8, n.2. But the majority inexplicably ignores the definition, insisting that the definition is of no moment because it is undisputed in this appeal that the Act “applies to all of the USOC’s programs. . . .” Id. (emphasis added).²

This use of the plural reveals the circular nature of the majority’s analysis. The underlying issue (easily resolved by the plain language of the statute) is whether, in examining the USOC’s challenged activities, we should consider the USOC as operating a single program or several separate ones. The majority incorrectly assumes – there is certainly no explanation for the approach – that we are dealing with separate programs. And it is only by ignoring the statutory definition and making this assumption of dealing with separate programs that the majority is able to assert that the unequal treatment afforded to the Plaintiffs is permissible.

² Indeed, the majority even accuses Plaintiffs of trying to “alter” section 504’s definition of “program or activity” by discussing the reasoning of Klinger v. Dept. of Corrections, 107 F.3d 609 (8th Cir. 1997). I fail to see how Plaintiffs are trying to “alter” the definition. Plaintiffs rely on the legislative definition of “program,” while the majority ignores it.

Not only does the majority ignore the statutory definition of “program,” but its assumption that separate programs are involved exonerates the USOC for doing just what the Supreme Court instructs must not be done – defining the benefit “in a way that effectively denies otherwise qualified handicapped individuals the meaningful access to which they are entitled. . . .” Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. 287, 301 (1985).

The USOC’s program discriminates against the plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs are subject to discrimination by being denied access to benefits that are provided to Olympic and Pan American Games athletes who are not disabled. The USOC’s practice of providing health insurance and other benefits to Olympic and Pan American Games athletes, but not Paralympic athletes, clearly has a discriminatory effect. Section 504 prohibits not only intentional discrimination but, I am satisfied, also the use of criteria or methods of administration such as those involved here that have the effect of subjecting people with disabilities to discrimination. 28 C.F.R. § 41.51(b)(3)(1). See also Alexander v. Choate, 469 U.S. at 299.³

³ In Choate, the Court assumed without deciding that section 504 reaches conduct that has a disparate impact on the disabled, after having noted compelling reasons to conclude that Congress intended such an interpretation and that all the circuits that have reached the issue had reached that conclusion.

Denying benefits to Plaintiffs because they are athletes training for the Paralympic Games, and not the Olympic or Pan American Games, is a proxy for discriminating against them because of their disabilities. The majority's assertion that "there is no fit between being an Olympic athlete and not being disabled," maj. op. at 11, demonstrates the faulty aim of its analysis. Presumably the majority would not countenance the denial of equal benefits based on gender. Yet, if such blatant discrimination existed, even then it could be said that there was "no fit" between being an Olympic athlete and being male. The USOC has shown four examples in one hundred years of disabled athletes who have competed in the Olympics or Pan American Games. The exceptions prove the rule: The policy of awarding benefits to athletes training for the Olympics or the Pan American Games while excluding those training for the Paralympic Games discriminates against the disabled. The reason that courts inquire about the "fit" between a practice and a class of protected individuals is because the fact that a practice does not discriminate against every member of a protected class is not sufficient to show that members of the protected class have the meaningful access to which they are entitled. See Lovell v. Chandler, 303 F.3d 1039, 1054 (9th Cir. 2002).

469 U.S. at 295-97 & n. 17. In the instant appeal, the defendants do not contend otherwise.

For these reasons I am compelled to respectfully
but emphatically dissent.

I. INTRODUCTION

These disability discrimination actions brought by elite Paralympic wheelchair athletes push the margins of federal disability discrimination laws as applied to the United States Olympic Committee (USOC) and Congress' enactment of our system of international amateur athletic competition. Civil Action No. 99-cv-2077-JLK, brought by wheelchair basketball Paralympian Mark Shepherd, challenges the USOC's purported failure to provide him with the services, benefits and financial and other support routinely provided to his Olympic counterparts. Civil Action 03-cv-1364 asserts similar claims on behalf of elite wheelchair racers Scott Hollonbeck, Jose Antonio Iniguez and Jacob Walter Jun Ho Heilveil, as well as claims related to the USOC's marketing of U.S. Paralympic trademarks as they relate to Hollonbeck's marketing company Vie Sports.

According to the Plaintiff wheelchair athletes, the USOC was established by Congress to oversee matters pertaining to the selection, training and participation of elite disabled and non-disabled amateur athletes in international Olympic, Paralympic, and Pan-American competition. Charged with obtaining the best amateur representation possible in both Olympic and Paralympic events, Plaintiffs claim it is discriminatory for the USOC to provide them programming, privileges, and financial support inferior to that provided non-disabled athletes under the Olympic program. Plaintiffs claim the USOC also discriminates against elite Paralympic athletes by promoting, marketing and selling (or limiting U.S. Paralympic's ability to promote, market and sell) rights to the Paralympic trademark at a level below the level it promotes, markets and sells rights to the Olympic mark, which has the effect of limiting the funds available for Paralympic programs and limiting the public's awareness of the Paralympics and individual Paralympic athletes. Finally, Plaintiffs claim the statutory governance structure of the USOC discriminates against Paralympic athletes by denying them representation. It is these "Athlete Claims," brought under § 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act, and the parties' cross-motions regarding their viability under the federal anti-disability discrimination laws, that are before me now for consideration.¹

¹ In addition to the "athlete" claims asserted on behalf of disabled athletes generally in both cases under the Americans with Disabilities Act, there are individual common law claims for damages asserted by Plaintiff Shepherd in 99-2077 and by Plaintiff Vie Sports Marketing in 03-1364. Shepherd, who was employed by the USOC for a period of time during which he also trained as a Paralympic athlete, seeks damages from the USOC based on the USOC's refusal to allow him to train during work hours which Shepherd claims violated the express written and oral terms of his employment contract. Vie Sports, a sports marketing company formed by Plaintiff Holl[o]nbeck in 2000 to market the Paralympic brand and trademark, asserts separate breach of contract and promissory estoppel claims against the USOC in 99-2077 based on the USOC's alleged failure to support or to allow Vie Sports to sell the rights to the Paralympic mark in the open market. These claims were addressed during oral

Given the important and novel issues raised, I set the motions for oral argument. Argument has been completed, and my rulings follow.

A. Statutory Framework.

The ASA.

Congress originally chartered the United States Olympic Association in 1950 to organize and promote the United States' participation in international Olympic competition. The USOA became the USOC in 1964. In 1978, concerned with “the disorganization and the serious factional disputes that seemed to plague amateur sports in the United States,” Congress enacted the Ted Stevens Olympic and Amateur Sports Act (“ASA”), P.L. 95-606 (codified at 36 U.S.C. § 371 et seq. (1978)). San Francisco Arts & Athletics, Inc. v. U.S. Olympic Committee, 483 U.S. 522, 543-544 (1987) (quoting from H.R. Rep. 95-1627 at p. 8) (“1978 House Report”). The ASA charged the USOC with responsibility for coordinating amateur athletics for the Olympic and Pan-American Games and for resolving disputes involving national governing bodies of individual sports. See 1978 House Report at 8, 1978 WL 8517 (Leg. Hist.). The duties of developing interest and participation in amateur athletics, as well as determining who may sponsor amateur athletic competition in the United States and what argument in September 2005 and will proceed separately from any “athlete” claims that survive summary judgment.

athletes will be sanctioned to compete on behalf of the United States in particular competitions, were left under the ASA to individual amateur sports organizations selected by the USOC as the “national governing bodies” in each sport on the Olympic or Pan-American program. 36 U.S.C. §§ 391 (selection and requirements for selection as “national governing body”), 392 (duties of national governing bodies).

With respect to the disabled, the original ASA identified as one of the 14 enumerated purposes of the USOC “to encourage and provide assistance to amateur athletic programs and competition for handicapped individuals, including where feasible, the expansion of opportunities for meaningful participation by handicapped individuals in programs of athletic competition for able-bodied individuals.” 36 U.S.C. § 374(13).² National governing bodies were

² Specifically, the 1978 ASA stated the “objects and purposes” of the USOC as follows:

(1) establish national goals for amateur athletic activities and encourage the attainment of those goals;

(2) coordinate and develop amateur athletic activity in the United States directly relating to international amateur athletic competition, so as to foster productive working relationships among sports-related organizations;

(3) exercise exclusive jurisdiction, either directly or through its constituent members or committees, over all matters pertaining to the participation of the United States in the Olympic Games and in the Pan-American Games, including the representation of the United States in such games, and over the organization of the Olympic Games and the Pan-American Games when held in the United States;

- (4) obtain for the United States, either directly or by delegation to the appropriate national governing body, the most competent amateur representation possible in each competition and event of the Olympic Games and of the Pan-American Games;
- (5) promote and support amateur athletic activities involving the United States and foreign nations;
- (6) promote and encourage physical fitness and public participation in amateur athletic activities;
- (7) assist organizations and persons concerned with sports in the development of amateur athletic programs for amateur athletes;
- (8) provide for the swift resolution of conflicts and disputes involving amateur athletes, national governing bodies, and amateur sports organizations, and protect the opportunity of any amateur athlete, coach, trainer, manager, administrator, or official to participate in amateur athletic competition;
- (9) foster the development of amateur athletic facilities for use by amateur athletes and assist in making existing amateur athletic facilities available for use by amateur athletes;
- (10) provide and coordinate technical information on physical training, equipment design, coaching, and performance analysis;
- (11) encourage and support research, development, and dissemination of information in the areas of sports medicine and sports safety;
- (12) encourage and provide assistance to amateur athletic activities for women;
- (13) encourage and provide assistance to amateur athletic programs and competition for handicapped individuals, including, where feasible, the expansion of opportunities for meaningful participation by delegated the specific duty to “encourage and support amateur athletic sports programs for handicapped individuals and the participation of handicapped individuals in amateur athletic activity, including where feasible, the expansion of opportunities for meaningful participation by handicapped individuals in programs of athletic competition for able-bodied individuals.” 36 U.S.C. § 392(7). The ASA made no mention of the Paralympic movement or Paralympic Games, and articulated its mission in terms of fostering and developing amateur international competition at the Olympic and Pan-American Games only. See id., § 374, supra n. 2.

In 1998, the ASA was amended to reflect “significant changes” in Olympic and amateur sports at the time, specifically including the “significant” growth “in size and prestige” of the Paralympics. See S. Rep. 105-325 at p. 2, 1998 WL 604018 (“1998 Senate Report”). The 1998 version of the ASA, now codified at 36 U.S.C. § 220501 et seq., amended the statement of the USOC’s purposes objectives at § 374(3) and (4) to add participation in the “Paralympic Games” handicapped individuals in programs of athletic competition for able-bodied individuals; and

(14) encourage and provide assistance to amateur athletes of racial and ethnic minorities for the purpose of eliciting the participation of such minorities in amateur athletic activities in which they are under-represented.

36 U.S.C.A. § 374 (1990) (emphasis added).

(recodified at 36 U.S.C. § 220503(3), (4))³ and amended § 391 to recognize “paralympic sports organizations” as national governing bodies for sports for which no national governing body had been designated. Id. § 220522(b). See 1998 Senate Rep. at 17.⁴

³ For example, as amended § 22503(3) and (4) charge the USOC

(3) to exercise exclusive jurisdiction, directly or through constituent members of committees, over –

(A) all matters pertaining to United States participation in the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and the Pan-America Games, including representation of the United States in the games; and

(B) the organization of the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and the Pan-American Games when held in the United States;

(4) to obtain for the United States, directly or by delegation to the appropriate national governing body, the most competent amateur representation possible in each event of the Olympic Games, the Paralympic Games, and Pan-American Games. . . .

36 U.S.C. § 22503(3), (4) (emphasis added.) In addition, § 374(13) was changed to replace the term “handicapped individuals” with the more appropriate “disabled amateur athletes.” Id. § 22503(13) (object and purpose of USOC includes “to encourage and provide assistance to amateur athletic programs and competition for amateur athletes with disabilities, including, where feasible, the expansion of opportunities for meaningful participation by such amateur athletes in programs of athletic competition for able-bodied amateur athletes.”).

36 U.S.C. § 220503(13) (changes in italics).

⁴ For example, the National Wheelchair Basketball Association (NWBA) serves as the national governing body for men’s,

My overall impression in analyzing this legislative history is that the ASA distinguishes between authority and power the USOC has to oversee the United States' participation in international amateur athletic competition and the authority it has nationally to regulate and govern amateur sports nationally to obtain the best representation in the Olympic/Pan-American and Paralympic Games. Vis á vis the international community, the USOC "represent[s] the United States as its national Olympic committee in relations with the International Olympic Committee and the Pan-American Sports Organization and as [the United States'] national Paralympic committee in relations with the International Paralympic Committee," "coordinate[s] and develop[s] amateur athletic activity in the United States directly related to international amateur athletic competition," and "organize[s], finance[s], and control[s] the representation of the United States in the competitions and events of the Olympic, Paralympic and Pan-American Games." 36 U.S.C. §§ 220505(c)(2), (3). Vis á vis individual citizens, however, and while charged generally to "encourage and provide assistance to amateur athletic activities for women" (§ 220503(12)), "minorities" (§ 220503(14)), and "amateur athletes with disabilities" (§ 220503(13)), the USOC effects this purpose under the ASA first by selecting and recognizing "national governing bod[ies]" (or, where necessary because a sport exists only for the disabled, “paralympic sports organizations”) for each amateur sport in the Olympic, Pan-American or Paralympic Games (§ 220521 & 22) and then delegating to them the duties of “develop[ing] interest and participation throughout the United States” in that sport (§ 220524(1)), “allow[ing] an amateur athlete to compete in any [sanctioned] international amateur athletic competition conducted by any amateur sports organization” (§ 220524(5)), and “encourag[ing] and support[ing] amateur athletic sports programs for individuals with disabilities and the participation of individuals with disabilities in amateur athletic activity.” § 220524(7). Thus, while Plaintiffs are not incorrect in claiming the USOC is charged with “obtaining” the best amateur representation both for the Olympic and Paralympic Games, they cannot ignore that it does so through “the appropriate national governing bod[ies]” to which the responsibility for supporting athletic opportunities and participation for all athletes, including the disabled, is delegated. See 36 U.S.C. §§ 22503(4) (“through the appropriate national governing body”), 22523-24 (authority and duties of national governing bodies include developing interest and participation in amateur sports they represent and to encourage and support amateur sports programs for individuals with disabilities).

women's and youth wheelchair basketball in the United States. See <http://www.nwba.org>, "Mission Statement."

Moreover, it is only those individual governing bodies that have any express duties under the ASA to provide equal or nondiscriminatory participation opportunities within their particular Olympic or Paralympic sport, and even then, only on the non-disability-based factors of race, color, age, religion, sex, or national origin. 36 U.S.C. § 220522(a)(8).⁵ The omission of disability as a prohibited discriminatory factor under 36 U.S.C. § 220522(a)(8) is significant. It is precisely because athletes are classified within their sports (or provided disability-specific sports) on the basis of their disabilities that the need for protection on the basis of that disability becomes problematic. Under the ASA, for example, the NWBA may not discriminate on the basis of race, sex or national origin. A prohibition against disability discrimination is omitted, ostensibly because the limits of federal antidiscrimination law are reached simply by the accommodation. No proscription against disability discrimination binds the NWBA because the NWBA's charges are all disabled by definition.

⁵ An amateur sports organization is eligible to be recognized, or to continue to be recognized, as a national governing body only if it

(8) provides an equal opportunity to amateur athletes . . . to participate in amateur athletic competition, without discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, age, or national origin . . .

36 U.S.C. § 220522(a). The equal opportunity provisions do not preclude discrimination on the basis of disability, ostensibly because disabled amateur athletes participate on the very basis of their disability.

The question, then, becomes whether some other statute or regulatory scheme operates to prohibit the USOC – as the umbrella organization charged with coordinating national governing organizations such as the NWBA and producing, through them, the best American representation at the Olympic, Pan-American and Paralympic Games – from allocating reduced or inferior benefits to athletes training for Paralympic, as opposed to Olympic or Paralympic competition. According to Plaintiffs, the ADA and Rehabilitation Act do so.

ADA/Rehabilitation Act.

The Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and ADA comprise a comprehensive federal mandate to remedy and eliminate discrimination against disabled individuals. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act states that “[n]o otherwise qualified individual with a disability in the United States . . . shall, solely by reason of her or his disability, be excluded from the participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.” 29 U.S.C. § 794(a). The ADA, enacted in 1990, expanded liability for disability discrimination. Title I of the ADA, codified at 42 U.S.C. § 12112, prohibits covered employers from discriminating against individuals on the basis of disability in the workplace regardless of their status as recipients of federal funding; Title II (§ 12132) prohibits public entities from discriminating against individuals or excluding them from participation in, or the benefits of, their services or programs on the basis of disability; and Title III (§ 12182) provides injunctive relief against private entities who discriminate against the disabled in the operation of “places of public accommodation.” See PGA Tour, Inc. v. Martin, 532 U.S. 661, 674-75 (2001). It is Title III that provides the basis for Plaintiffs’ claims in this case.

Title III provides “[n]o individual shall be discriminated against on the basis of disability in the full and equal enjoyment of the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, or accommodations of any place of public accommodation by any person who owns, leases (or leases to), or operates a place of public accommodation.” 42 U.S.C. § 12182(a). A “place of public accommodation” for purposes of Title III is a facility generally open to the public at large, including restaurants, hotels, libraries, stores, theaters, stadiums, zoos, and the like. Id. § 12181(7). General prohibitions under Title III include denying, on the basis of disability, opportunities to participate in or benefit from the goods, services, privileges or accommodations of the private entity (§ 12182(b)(1)(A)(i)); affording disabled individuals the opportunity to participate in or benefit from such goods or services in a manner “not equal to that afforded to other individuals” (§ (b)(1)(A)(ii)); or providing disabled individuals with a good, service, facility, privilege, or accommodation “separate from” that afforded other individuals unless necessary to provide the individual a benefit “as effective” as that provided to others.

(§ (b)(1)(A)(iii)). It is also unlawful under Title III to impose or apply eligibility criteria for use of a public accommodation that screen out or tend to screen out the disabled from fully and equally enjoying any goods, services, facilities, privileges, or advantages of that public accommodation (42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(2)(A)(i)); to fail to modify policies or to take steps necessary to afford the disabled goods, services, facilities, etc. of the accommodation (§ (b)(2)(A)(ii) & (iii)); and failure to remove architectural and communication barriers to ensure that no person with a disability is excluded or denied goods, services, facilities, etc. (§ (b)(2)(A)(iv), (v)).

In their Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs assert three different theories of discrimination under Title III: (1) discrimination in the denial of participation in Olympic Programming in violation of § 12182(b)(1)(A)(i); (2) discrimination in the provision of an unequal participation opportunity in violation of § 12182(b)(1)(A)(ii); and (3) discrimination through the use an eligibility criterion for Olympic Programming that screens out the disabled from full and equal enjoyment of the public accommodation in violation of § 12182(b)(2)(A)(i). Am. Compl. ¶¶ 2, 48-59.⁶ Plaintiffs specifically do not assert a claim based on the provision of a separate benefit under § 12182(b)(1)(A)(iii).

⁶ The theories of discrimination set forth in Title III of the ADA also constitute discrimination under the Rehabilitation Act. Compare 28 C.F.R. § §§ 41.51(b)(1)(i)-(vii) (2006) (“General prohibitions against discrimination”) with § 84.13 (Rehabilitation Act regulation from which 42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(2)(A)(i) was

Plaintiffs' Title III claim, then, rests on a set of carefully crafted assumptions. First, based on the USOC's "control" over administration, housing, training, and competition in the United States, together with its operation of Olympic Training Centers in Colorado Springs (Colorado), Chula Vista (California) and Lake Placid (New York), Plaintiffs claim the USOC "operates places of public accommodation" such that it is a covered entity under Title III. Am. Compl., 03-cv-1364, ¶¶ 24, 26-33. Plaintiffs then characterize programming benefits offered athletes by the USOC and Paralympic Committee as "goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, or accommodations" of those "places of public accommodation," and contend the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committees discriminate against them by denying them, on the basis of their disabilities, the "full and equal enjoyment" of those programming benefits.⁷ Id.

derived). See H.R. Rep. No. 101-485, pt. 2, at 105 (1990), reprinted in 1990 U.S.C.C.A.N. 303, 388.

⁷ For example, Plaintiffs claim they are relegated to lowest priority in terms of using Olympic training facilities, receive few or reduced financial incentives, and are ineligible for tuition grants, the Resident Athlete Program, or insurance. The USOC, according to Plaintiffs, does not even supply Paralympians with uniforms. The result, Plaintiffs contend, is that, they must pay significant training expenses out of their own pockets, impairing their ability to train for Paralympic competition. See Am. Compl., 03-cv-1364 at ¶¶ 48-60. Other complaints are less tangible, including Plaintiff Hollonbeck's allegations that he was

¶¶ 144-146. That each of these characterizations is strained is something I address in the next section.

For their relief, Plaintiffs seek an injunction requiring Defendants to cease their discrimination and provide them “full and equal enjoyment of their goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, and/or accommodations in a fashion to be specified following trial.” Am. Compl., 03-cv-1364 at p. 24 “Prayer for Relief.”⁸ Plaintiffs equivocate as to the specifics of any injunction ultimately issued, acknowledging “equal” allocations would not necessarily be appropriate or required under the ADA, and urging the adoption of an “equitable” or “proportionate” remedial standard along the lines of that available under Title IX and its implementing discriminated against during exhibition events in the 1992, 1996 and 2000 Olympic Games by being denied benefits such as marching in the opening ceremonies or receiving prize money for winning medals. Id. ¶¶ 61-67. Since Hollonbeck’s participation in the 2000 Olympics, Paralympians now receive financial awards for gold, silver and bronze medals, but Plaintiffs contend the practice remains discriminatory because awards are at 1/10th the amount of Olympic medal awards. Id. ¶¶ 51-53.

regulations.⁹ Plaintiffs support their reliance on Title IX with a citation to Grove City College v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555, 566 (1984), and in particular in the Supreme Court's look to the Rehabilitation Act as an interpretive guide for Title IX, on grounds both find their source in the antidiscrimination provisions of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. While I appreciate the analogy and agree Title IX's regulatory remedial scheme works well with Plaintiffs' theory of relief in this case, I cannot agree federal courts are authorized to cobble together congressional enactments in this manner. As I will explain more fully below, Plaintiffs' request that I graft a remedial scheme promulgated under a statute banning sex discrimination onto statutes prohibiting disability discrimination, and then infuse both into the statute establishing the federally chartered corporation that oversees the country's amateur athletic system and has exclusive jurisdiction over matters pertaining to international Olympic, Paralympic and Pan-American competition, simply falls outside the scope of federal judicial authority.

Defendants deny Plaintiffs have stated a viable claim for disability discrimination. The crux of the issues raised are set forth in the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment in Shepherd (Doc. Nos. 139 and 140) and in the USOC's 12(b)(6) Motion to Dismiss in Hollonbeck (Doc 3). The USOC denies the ADA or Rehabilitation Act confer a cause of action for disparate treatment or discrimination in the allocation of resources between Olympic/Pan-American athletes and Paralympians, maintaining these are separate programs across which differences in allocation are not discriminatory for purposes of federal civil rights legislation because they are not comparable.

B. The Problem of "Fit."

My ultimate and reluctant conclusion is that the USOC is correct and Plaintiffs have no actionable right under the ADA or Rehabilitation Act to enjoin the USOC's actions in allocating lesser privileges and benefits to Paralympic athletes than Olympic athletes. The overarching issue is duty, namely, whether the USOC has a duty to provide Paralympians with opportunities, support and benefits similar, proportionate, or equal to those provided Olympians. The language of the ASA imposes no such duty.¹⁰ The question is whether, directly or by reference to other civil rights laws (such as Title IX, the ADA and Rehabilitation Act) give rise to one.

Subject matter jurisdiction is uncontested and under a liberal reading of the parties' pleadings I find it exists under 28 U.S.C. § 1343 and 1367. While I proceed to analyze Plaintiffs' claims under the ADA and Rehabilitation Acts, I pause to express my overarching concern that, absent an extension of existing law by Congress or a relevant regulatory agency, neither the wrong of which Plaintiffs complain nor the relief they seek "fit" within the rubric of the ADA or Rehabilitation Act.

My initial concern is with the assertion that U.S. Olympic Training Centers are "places of public accommodation" within the contemplation of 42 U.S.C. § 12181(7) and that financial support, insurance, being able to walk in opening ceremonies, receiving prize money, or serving on governing bodies are "goods, services, facilities, privileges, [or] advantages" attendant the operation of those "places" for purposes of the ADA. Olympic Training Centers are venues to which only the most select athletes in the nation have access. They are not recreation centers, stadia or arenas held out for use by the non-disabled public at large. The question of the ADA's applicability, in my view, is a serious threshold question that the parties largely avoid.

The phrase "public accommodation" is defined for purposes of Title III in terms of 12 extensive categories of facilities leased or operated by private entities “if the operations of such entities affect commerce.” The facilities covered are:

- (A) an inn, hotel, motel, or other place of lodging . . . ;
- (B) a restaurant, bar, or other establishment serving food or drink;
- (C) a motion picture house, theater, concert hall, stadium, or other place of exhibition or entertainment;
- (D) an auditorium, convention center, lecture hall, or other place of public gathering;
- (E) a bakery, grocery store, clothing store, hardware store, shopping center, or other sales or rental establishment;
- (F) a laundromat, dry-cleaner, bank, barber shop, beauty shop, travel service, shoe repair service, funeral parlor, gas station, office of an accountant or lawyer, pharmacy, insurance office, professional office of a health care provider, hospital, or other service establishment;
- (G) a terminal, depot, or other station used for specified public transportation;
- (H) a museum, library, gallery, or other place of display or collection;
- (I) a park, zoo, amusement park, or other place of recreation;

(J) a nursery, elementary, secondary, undergraduate, or postgraduate private school, or other place of education;

(K) a day care center, senior citizen center, homeless shelter, food bank, adoption agency, or other social service center establishment; and

(L) a gymnasium, health spa, bowling alley, golf course, or other place of exercise or recreation.

42 U.S.C. § 12181(7) (emphasis added), applied in Bauer v. Muscular Dystrophy Ass'n, Inc., 268 F. Supp.2d 1281, 1289-1290 (D. Kan. 2003), aff'd 427 F.3d 1326 (10th Cir. 2005). Plaintiffs contend the USOC's training facilities fall within the category of "gymnasium, health spa . . . or other place of exercise or recreation" and therefore constitute a "place of public accommodation" under subsection (L). While the categories listed at § 12181(7) are to be "construed liberally to afford people with disabilities equal access to the wide variety of establishments available to the non-disabled," Bauer at 1290 (citing Martin, 532 U.S. at 666-67), there is something fundamentally different about the establishments and "places of exercise and recreation" open to the non-disabled public generally – which appear to be what the category at § 12181(7)(L) describe – and the United States' four Olympic Training Centers.

Unlike the public and private golf courses operated or "leased" by the PGA in Martin – to which all paying customers have access regardless of ability – the training facilities operated by the USOC are accessible only to those already selected by the national governing bodies to the Olympic, Pan-American or Paralympic teams in their individual sports and identified as elite, world-class athletes. C.f. Martin, 532 U.S. at 677-78 (among the “privileges” offered members of the general public who pay to play on PGA operated golf courses is the privilege of vying to qualify for and play in the PGA Tour); Akiyama v. United States Judo Inc., 181 F. Supp.2d 1179, 1183 (W.D. Wa. 2002) (applying Martin and holding that the Civil Rights Act’s prohibition against discrimination on basis of religion applied to amateur judo competition where members of general public were welcome to test their skills and talents in preliminary tournaments designed to identify the best competitors). Absent any allegation that the privileges and benefits afforded athletes at the U.S. Olympic Training Centers are available to members of the general public vying for a berth on the U.S. Olympic or Paralympic team, it is difficult to say that Martin applies. Does the ADA mandate “full and equal enjoyment” of world-class training facilities to which only the fewest among us have access, disabled or non-disabled? At best, the Supreme Court in Martin left unaddressed the question raised in the instant case, namely, whether “places of public accommodation” to which the non-disabled do not have general access fall within the purview of Title III.

Moreover, the benefits Plaintiffs seek relate less to the USOC’s physical facilities than to the teams they put forth for international competition. This, too, stretches the “fit” between the discrimination alleged and the jurisdictional basis of Plaintiffs claims under the ADA. In Elitt v. U.S.A. Hockey, 922 F. Supp. 217, 223 (E.D. Mo. 1996), for example, the district court determined it lacked jurisdiction over a cognitively disabled child’s Title III claim against U.S. amateur hockey organization because plaintiff was challenging the “denial of participation in the youth hockey league instead of denial of access to a place of accommodation, i.e. the ice rink.” Id. (youth hockey league is not a “place of public accommodation” for purposes of Subchapter III of the ADA). Only because Plaintiffs in the instant case challenge the denial of their full and equal enjoyment of the USOC’s physical facilities (in their relegation to third priority for their use) do they survive scrutiny under this threshold jurisdictional requirement.

The problem of “fit” is further underscored by a look at the selective comparisons on which Plaintiffs rely. Plaintiffs allege discrimination in their treatment as disabled individuals by the USOC as Paralympians compared to the USOC’s treatment of “non-disabled” Olympic (and Pan-American) athletes. The distinction is muddled by the fact that disabled athletes are not per se disqualified from participation in the Olympics or Pan-American Games.¹¹ Because

¹¹ The Paralympics provide participation opportunities for elite athletes belonging to six different disability groups: amputee, cerebral palsy, visual impairment, spinal cord injuries,

“disabled” individuals can and have participated in the Olympics and Pan-American Games, the comparison categories on which Plaintiffs rely are not necessarily the “disabled” and non-disabled as those distinctions are drawn under the ADA, but Olympic and Paralympic athletes.

Finally, I question the viability of Plaintiffs’ theory of disability-based “discrimination” as conflating Olympic benefits offered or not offered to Paralympians with the benefits of access or equal enjoyment of public accommodations by the disabled. Because this conflation is ultimately what dooms Plaintiffs’ claims under an ADA analysis, the question is largely academic in this prefatory context. Wheelchair athletes are obviously treated differently (i.e. “discriminated” against) on the basis of their disability in their relegation to the Paralympic wheelchair basketball event as opposed to the Olympic basketball event. This difference in treatment or access, however, which is obviously based on and defined solely by the player’s disability, is not the “discrimination” Plaintiffs seek to call out. Rather, Plaintiffs challenge the lesser or inferior quality of the benefits intellectual disability and a group which includes all those that do not fit into the aforementioned groups (les autres). Athletes whose disabilities do not impact their ability to participate in events recognized by the International Olympic Committee (i.e., deaf swimmer Terence Parkin, who won a silver medal in the 2000 Olympics in Sydney) are not required to participate in the Paralympics and are ostensibly not part of Plaintiffs’ theory of disability discrimination.

allocated the Paralympic wheelchair basketball athletes by the USOC, claiming the different allocation is based on eligibility criteria (membership on the Olympic team) that screens out or tends to screen out disabled elite athletes. Again, there is an amalgam of standards forming the basis for Plaintiffs' claim. Plaintiffs, for example, take pains to distinguish theirs from a claim that the USOC provides them with an ineffective "separate benefits" under § 12182(b)(1)(A)(iii) because that analysis forces them into a separate-program paradigm that constrains their theory discrimination. Yet the remedy Plaintiffs seek is precisely that they be given benefits and privileges "as effective" or "equivalent to" those provided Olympians. Is a lack of parity or inequality between Paralympic and Olympic programming actionable except as between "separate" programs? Given the significantly smaller population (the disabled) from which Paralympians are drawn, the Paralympic Games are smaller in scale with fewer participants than the Olympics and Pan-American Games. Policies directing a lesser allocation of resources between the Olympians and Paralympians may simply reflect that fact wholly independently of any disability-based discrimination.¹² Plaintiffs concede this point, but again invoke Title IX and its implementing regulations to urge an application of the ADA that would compel the USOC's to comply with its mandated purpose to develop and increase amateur athletic opportunities for disabled athletes, not merely to reflect the status quo.

¹² As Defendants argue, the fewer number of participants and internationally fielded teams in the Paralympic Games results in American Paralympians, for example, having significantly greater chances of medaling at the Paralympic Games than American athletes competing in the Olympics. Parity in medal awards, then, would result in U.S. Paralympic athletes

Plaintiffs' goals, noble and inspiring, extend beyond the reach of the courts to find and enforce under the ADA or the Rehabilitation Act. The Title IX analogy is apt only to the extent it suggests new legislation or the amendment of the USOC's federal charter pursuant to which a regulatory scheme for the equitable remediation of discriminatory allocations between disabled and non-disabled representatives on the United States' elite international athletic teams. Title IX does not infuse the ADA with a remedial scheme that then infuses the ASA with a cause of action for the "discrimination" alleged in this case. Title III of the ADA entitles disabled individuals with the right to seek to enjoin private entities from providing unequal or ineffective opportunities to enjoy or participate in accommodations made available to the public generally. The USOC's Paralympic program, with its attendant differences in perks and privileges receiving far more than their Olympic counterparts. Of course, these fact-based scenarios are germane only to the extent they capture the complexity of the "discrimination" question and illustrate grounds for my unease on the issue of "fit." They are not germane, and I do not consider them, as part of my analysis of Plaintiffs' claims under a Rule 12(b)(6) standard.

compared to the USOC's Olympic program, exists to provide disabled individuals with participation opportunities fundamentally premised on and defined by the disabilities Plaintiffs argue cannot lawfully form the basis for separate treatment. There is an unavoidable non sequitur to the assertion.

In short, I am troubled that Plaintiffs' theory of relief fundamentally overreaches, looking to the courts and federal antidiscrimination law to remedy inequities in the quality of the accommodation afforded certain disabled elite athletes to compete internationally in amateur athletics – accommodations that are defined exclusively by those athletes' inability to compete without accommodation – that are not enjoyed by the non-disabled public at large and which exist solely as a reflection of political will (or lack thereof) within the USOC and/or the legislative and executive branches of government directing its charter.

Do I decry a culture that relegates Paralympians to second class status in the quantity and quality of benefits and support they receive from the USOC? Emphatically yes. I conclude, however, that the ADA and Rehabilitation Act are aimed at the baser stuff of discrimination, such as the denial generally of a disabled person's right to participate fully and equally in public life, including places offering sports and recreation to the general public. The ADA and Rehabilitation Act simply do not apply to the wrongs alleged by Plaintiffs.

In my view, the inequities and injustices Plaintiffs describe are ultimately for the legislative or executive,¹³ and not judicial, branches of government to acknowledge and rectify. It appears, however, that for purposes of the instant Motions Defendants agree the ADA and Rehabilitation Act apply to the USOC and the U.S. Paralympic Committee and reach their programming benefits and decisions. For purposes of appeal and in order fully to develop the record, I proceed to address Defendants' Motions directed to the merits of Plaintiffs' claims.

II. MERITS.

In its effort to train and obtain the best United States athletes for the Olympic Games, the USOC offers Olympic athletes benefits and incentives. This Olympic "programming" includes providing $25,000, $10,000, and $2,500, respectively, for each gold, silver, and bronze medal an athlete wins at the Olympic Games. (Am. Compl., 03-cv-1364, ¶ 52.). Olympic programming also includes, but is not limited to, providing Olympic athletes first priority in using USOC training facilities (¶ 54) and making Basic Grants, Tuition Assistance Grants, and Elite Athlete Health Insurance available to Olympic athletes. Id. ¶¶ 55-57.

Olympic programming is not offered to Paralympic athletes. Rather, Paralympic athletes receive third priority in using USOC training facilities, id. at ¶ 54, and the Paralympic medal-incentive is ten percent of that provided to Olympic athletes. Id. ¶ 53 ($2,500, $1,500, and $1,000, respectively, for each gold, silver, or bronze medal). Moreover, the USOC does not make Basic Grants, Tuition Assistance Grants, or Elite Athlete Health Insurance available to Paralympic athletes. Id. at ¶¶ 55-57, 59. Plaintiffs assert the USOC's original and amended Constitutions discriminate against Paralympic athletes, first by denying them participation on the Athlete Advisory Committee all together, and now by limiting their representation to two members. Id. ¶ 68-69.

Plaintiffs Scott[] Hollonbeck, Jose Antonio Iniguez, Jacob Walter Jung Ho Heilveil (collectively Athlete Plaintiffs), are all current or former Paralympic athletes. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 35, 39, 42-43, 45-47.) They assert the USOC's system of distributing benefits discriminates against them on the basis of their disabilities. Id. at ¶ 48. As a result of being denied Olympic programming, Athlete Plaintiffs assert they have incurred significant personal expense that diminishes their ability to train and their opportunity to compete on behalf of the United States as Paralympians. See id. at ¶ 60. In addition, Plaintiff Holl[o]nbeck states he was discriminated against during the 1992, 1996 and 2000 Olympic Games by being denied certain intangible benefits of participation, including medal compensation and marching in the opening ceremonies. Id. ¶¶ 61-67. As set forth above, Defendants move to dismiss.

A. Preemption.

Defendants contend Plaintiffs' ADA and Rehabilitation Act claims are "actually challenges to the method and reasoning by which the USOC decides to allocate its limited resources to numerous different athlete classes under its jurisdiction" and therefore within the USOC's exclusive jurisdiction 36 U.S.C. § 220503(3). See Defs.' Mot. Dismiss, 03-cv-1364, at 6. In support of this argument, Defendants cite several cases in which courts have held no private right of action exists under the ASA to challenge matters left exclusively to the USOC or the national governing bodies of individual amateur sports. Id. at 5 (citing Martinez v. USOC, 802 F.2d 1275 (10th Cir. 1986) (holding Congress did not intend for USOC to be liable in tort for wrongful death of boxer injured during events not fully controlled by USOC); Oldfield v. Athletic Congress, 779 F.2d 505 (9th Cir. 1985) (no private cause of action to challenge governing body's determination regarding loss of amateur status); Michels v. USOC, 741 F.2d 155 (7th Cir. 1984) (weight lifter had no cause of action under ASA to challenge suspension for positive drug test); DeFrantz v. USOC, 492 F. Supp. 1181 (D.D.C. 1980) (1978 ASA changed USOC's charter but did not alter USOC's exclusive authority to decide not to send an American team to 1980 Olympics), aff'd, 701 F.2d 221 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Walton-Floyd v. USOC, 965 S.W.2d 35 (Tex. Ct. App. 1998) (no private cause of action under ASA in tort for breaching duty of care in connection with drug testing hotline); Dolan v. U.S. Equestrian Team, Inc., 608 A.2d 434 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1992) (USOC has exclusive jurisdiction over athlete eligibility determinations and no private cause of action is recognized under ASA to challenge nonselection for U.S. equestrian team)).

Athlete Plaintiffs agree with Defendants that the ASA bars private rights of action brought under the Act (Pls.' Opp'n at 18), but reject any characterization of their claims as "pertaining" exclusively to the United States' participation in the Olympic, Paralympic and Pan-American Games. Plaintiffs contend the duty to allocate benefits to Paralympians in a nondiscriminatory manner arises not from the ASA, but from the ADA and Rehabilitation Act, and requires them to effect their corporate mandate in a way that does not discriminate on the basis of disability. Id. at 23.

Plaintiffs support their argument with several cases in which courts have permitted plaintiffs to proceed with a variety of claims in spite of the defendants being governed by the ASA. Id. at 20-21 (citing Slaney v. Int'l Amateur Athletic Fed'n, 244 F.3d 580 (7th Cir. 2001)) (RICO and conspiracy allegations brought by athlete against USOC in blood doping case not preempted, but failed under 12(b)(6) standard to state claim); Akiyama, 181 F. Supp .2d at 1183 (holding Title II of Civil Rights Act of 1964 applied to prevent discrimination on basis of religion at judo competition); Sternberg v. U.S.A. Nat'l Karate-Do Fed'n, Inc., 123 F. Supp. 2d 659 (E.D.N.Y. 2000) (female athlete stated valid Title IX claim against karate national governing body based on organization's decision to withdraw women's karate team from international competition).¹⁴

¹⁴ I note that in addition to allowing plaintiff athlete's Title IX claim to proceed, the district court in Sternberg did, indeed, recognize an implied private right of action under the ASA to seek damages against a the karate national governing body for sex discrimination. Sternberg, 123 F. Supp. 2d at 664-666 (applying four factors identified in Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 (1975) and principles articulated in Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677 (1979) and Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978) to conclude Congress's statements in ASA prohibiting sex discrimination and requiring governing bodies to provide "support and encouragement" for participation by women permit "[a] narrow right of action regarding sex discrimination by national governing sports bodies [to] be implied."). Plaintiffs do not rely on this aspect of Sternberg, conceding that in the Tenth Circuit, at least, no private right of action exists to enforce the terms of the ASA. See Martinez, 802 F.2d at 1281 (enactment of 1978 ASA included removing athlete's "bill of rights," evincing Congress's consideration and rejection of a cause of action for athletes to enforce ASA's provisions).

To this list we may add Lee v. United States Taekwondo Union, 331 F. Supp. 2d 1252 (D. Haw. 2004), in which the district court rejected the USOC's contention that the ASA preempted federal civil rights laws and allowed former U.S. Olympic coach to bring a race discrimination claim against the USOC and the national governing body for the sport of taekwondo under 42 U.S.C. § 1981. The district court applied the reasoning in Oldfield, Slaney and Michels to distinguish between private claims challenging eligibility or similar matters "pertaining to participation" regarding which the USOC and its national governing bodies have exclusive jurisdiction under 36 U.S.C. § 220503(3) and claims that invoke rights independently of this grant of jurisdiction. Thus, to the extent plaintiff Lee was seeking a declaration of eligibility and subsequent reinstatement as coach of the U.S. Olympic Taekwondo Team through his state tort and contract claims, the court concluded such claims were preempted. Lee, 331 F. Supp. 2d at 1257. To the extent Lee was invoking protections afforded him under federal civil rights laws independently of and in addition rights governed exclusively by the ASA, however, his claims were not preempted. Id. at 1260-61 ("when two federal statutes may be reconciled, the court must give effect to both"), (citing Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 267 (1981)). As long as the remedy sought does not require it to enter the realm of the USOC's exclusive jurisdiction, "the [ASA] does not nullify or supersede other federal laws that provide private rights of action to ensure freedom from discrimination." Id. at 1260 (because discrimination on the basis of race in violation of § 1981 did not pertain to the United States' participation in the Olympic Games, Lee could proceed with his § 1981 claim).

The instant case presents an exceedingly close call under Lee and related authorities because the matters of which Plaintiffs complain – priority usage of training facilities, training grants and insurance benefits, the USOC's Constitutional governance structure, medal incentives and decisions as to who walks or does not walk in Olympic opening ceremonies – indeed sound like “matters pertaining to” the United States' participation in the Olympic or Paralympic Games within the exclusive jurisdiction of the USOC under 36 U.S.C. § 220503(3). Given the predominate mandates of the ADA to call out and remedy disability-based discrimination, as well as the inexactness of the injunctive relief sought,¹⁵ I cannot categorically state that Plaintiffs' Athlete Claims fall within the exclusive realm of “matters pertaining to the participation of the United States in the . . . Paralympic Games.”

I proceed, then, to analyze Plaintiffs' allegations of discrimination under the ADA and Rehabilitation Act under a 12(b)(6) standard.

B. Standard of Review

The purpose of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss is to test the sufficiency of a complaint. U.S. Olympic Comm. v. Am. Media, Inc., 156 F. Supp. 2d. 1200, 1204 (D. Colo. 2001). A complaint must put the defendant on notice of the plaintiff's claim and the general facts upon which it is based. Brunetti v. Rubin, 999 F. Supp. 1408, 1409-10 (D. Colo. 1998) (incorporating Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)). A plaintiff need not precisely state the elements of each claim, but he must provide direct or inferential allegations that would support recovery under some legal theory. Id. There is a strong presumption against granting a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, Maez v. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel., Inc., 54 F.3d 1488, 1496 (10th Cir. 1995) (referring to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure), and unless it is clear "the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief," such motions must be denied. American Media, 156 F. C. Conclusions of Law.

I have already expressed my doubts regarding the viability of Plaintiffs' ADA claim based on the disconnection between the goods and services being denied and Plaintiffs rights to them as "public accommodations," as well as my concerns that at least some of Plaintiffs' complaints fall outside the scope of federal antidiscrimination laws because they pertain to matters over which the USOC has exclusive jurisdiction. Nevertheless, and in order to develop the record fully, I proceed to analyze Plaintiffs' Rehabilitation Act and ADA claims on their merits.

The ADA and Rehabilitation Act are interrelated Congressional mandates designed to remedy discrimination against disabled individuals. See McGeshick v. Principi, 357 F.3d 1146, 1149 (10th Cir. 2004). The Rehabilitation Act provides the baseline level of protection from disability discrimination when the ADA must be construed. See id. at § 12201(a) ("Except as otherwise provided . . . nothing in this chapter shall be construed to apply a lesser standard than the standards applied under Title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. . . .").

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act provides that "[n]o otherwise qualified individual with a disability . . . shall, solely by reason of her or his disability, be excluded from the participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance. . . ." 29 U.S.C.A. § 794(a) (2006).¹⁶ The prima facie elements of claim under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act are straightforward, requiring a plaintiff to show (1) he is disabled; (2) he is otherwise qualified for participation in the program; (3) the program discriminates against the plaintiff; and (4) the program receives federal financial assistance. McGeshick, 357 F.3d at 1150 (citing cases).

On the other hand, the prima facie elements of an ADA claim depend on a number of factors, including the alleged theory of discrimination, see, e.g., Fortune v. Am. Multi-Cinema, Inc., 364 F.3d 1075, 1082 (9th Cir. 2004) (prima facie elements in Title III failure to accommodate case); Hubbard v. Twin Oaks Health and Rehab. Ctr., 408 F. Supp. 2d 923, 929 (E.D. Cal. 2004) (prima facie elements in Title III failure to remove barrier case); In re Baby K, 832 F. Supp. 1022, 1028-29 (E.D. Va. 1993) (prima facie elements in Title III denial of participation case), and the factual circumstances of the case. See, e.g., Mershon v. St. Louis Univ., 442 F.3d 1069, 1076 (8th Cir. 2006) (plaintiff must show he was qualified academically where failure to accommodate alleged in post-secondary education context); cf. Rakity v. Dillon Companies, Inc., 302 F.3d 1152, 1164 (10th Cir. 2002) (applying McDonnell Douglas burden shifting framework in Title I case “as modified to relate to differing factual situations”). As previously set forth, Plaintiffs in the instant case assert three different theories of discrimination under §§ 12182(b)(1)(A)(i) (denial of participation), (ii) (unequal participation opportunity) and (b)(2)(A)(i) (discriminatory eligibility criteria tending to screen them from full and equal enjoyment). Accordingly, to state a prima facie case of discrimination under the ADA and Rehabilitation Act, Plaintiffs must demonstrate (1) they are disabled; (2) Defendants operate places of public accommodation; (3) Plaintiffs are qualified for participation in the program or program benefits of the public accommodation; and (4) the USOC discriminated against Plaintiffs by denying them the opportunity to participate in the program, by providing them a participation opportunity unequal to that afforded non-disabled individuals, and/or by using eligibility criteria for program benefits that screens out or tends to screen out the disabled from fully enjoying the program.

I have already determined the USOC does not operate a “place of public accommodation” or, if it does, that the discrimination alleged by Plaintiffs relates not to their rights of access to that accommodation or, with the exception of priority access to gymnasias or other physical training facilities of the U.S. Olympic Training Centers, to the benefits thereof, but to their right to participate in and receive full and equal enjoyment of membership on a USOC-sponsored team. Looking beyond those “problems of fit,” however, the question arises as to whether, in a Title III case premised on allegations of disparate treatment between categories of disabled and non-disabled individuals in the benefits of an athletic program, a Title III plaintiff must, like his counterparts proceeding under the Rehabilitation Act and Titles I and II of the ADA,¹⁷ demonstrate that he is both disabled and “otherwise qualified” to receive the benefits that form the basis of his claim of discrimination. Under the circumstances of this case, I agree with Defendants that he does.

The ADA addresses three broad categories of discrimination: disparate treatment, disparate impact, and a failure to provide a reasonable accommodation. E.g. Davidson v. America Online, Inc., 337 F.3d 1179, 1188-89 (10th Cir. 2003) (making the assertion in a Title I employment case). Plaintiffs’ allegations in this case are of classic disparate treatment, i.e., that they, as Paralympians, receive reduced benefits and fewer privileges than their non-disabled counterparts purely on the basis of their disability. It is clear that in disparate treatment cases, an individual must be otherwise qualified to receive the benefit he asserts it is discriminatory to deny him.

The logical explanation for the omission of an “otherwise qualified” requirement under Title III is that, “in most circumstances, no qualifications are required to enjoy a public accommodation as secured by Title III.” Mershon, 442 F.3d at 1976. Where, by contrast, the nature of a “public” accommodation is such that it provides programs only to qualified members of the general public, a disabled individual must show he is also qualified as an element of his prima facie case. See Martin, 532 U.S. at 680 (significant in Title III case that, “[i]n consideration of the entry fee, any golfer with the requisite letters of recommendation acquires the opportunity to qualify for and compete in petitioner’s tours”). See also Bowers, 118 F. Supp. 2d at 517, n. 18 (“[w]hile words ‘otherwise qualified’ or ‘qualified individual’ do not appear in the language of Title III, Title II analysis can be applicable to Title III claims.”); cf. Bercovitch v. Baldwin Sch., Inc., 133 F.3d 141, 154 (1st Cir. 1998) (finding little significance in lack of “qualified” language in Title III). This requirement is consistent with the law construing the Rehabilitation Act, and I conclude Plaintiffs must prove they were qualified individuals with a disability whose disparate treatment can only be explained as discrimination on the basis of disability.

A plaintiff is “otherwise qualified” under the Rehab Act if he “is able to meet all of a program’s requirements in spite of his [disability].” Southeastern Community College v. Davis, 442 U.S. 397, 406 (1979). To satisfy the prima facie qualification element under both the ADA and Rehab Act, Athlete Plaintiffs must show that with or without reasonable modification to USOC rules, policies, or practices, they meet the essential eligibility requirements for Olympic benefits.

Appropriate Comparison Group – Unified or Separate Program.

Plaintiffs contend the necessary eligibility requirement for Olympic benefits is not membership on the U.S. Olympic team, but membership on any of the three teams under the USOC’s purview under its federally mandated charter (i.e., the U.S. Olympic, Pan-American or Paralympic Teams). In other words, because the USOC oversees a single, comprehensive program for that group of elite, world-class athletes who participate as representatives of the United States in the Olympic, Paralympic or Pan-American Games, Plaintiffs contend the USOC cannot discriminate in its allocation of benefits to that group on the basis of disability alone.

As previously set forth, Plaintiffs’ characterization of the USOC as a single selection and training organization charged with allocating programming and benefits in a nondiscriminatory manner across all Olympic, Paralympic and Pan-American athletes is belied by the organizational structure established by the ASA, the USOC's federal charter and the legislative history evincing Congress's intent in enacting both. It suggests – inaccurately – that Congress's 1998 amendments to the ASA did more than formalize recognition of the existing Paralympic movement and add the Paralympics to the list of international competitions to which the United States will send representatives. It also ignores the separate nature of the participation opportunity that forms the historical essence of the Paralympic experience, and glosses over the distinction between equality of access, in terms of participation opportunity, and the quality of that access once provided. Here, the participation opportunity for wheelchair athletes is clearly provided through a separate (Paralympic) program.

The cases Plaintiffs cite to urge a comparison with the USOC's "unified" Olympic/Paralympic/Pan-American "program" do not compel a contrary conclusion because they turn on a denial of access to the unified "program," which is not at issue in this case.¹⁸

¹⁸ Both Concerned Parents to Save Dreher Park Center v. City of West Palm Beach, 846 F. Supp. 986 (S.D. Fla. 1994) and Rodde v. Bonta, 357 F.3d 988 (9th Cir. 2004) involved the elimination of programs or facilities for the disabled. In Dreher Park, the district court held the elimination of specialized recreational programs for disabled children had the effect of denying disabled individuals the benefits of the city's overall recreational program in violation of Title II. The court rejected the city's argument that the elimination could not be deemed discriminatory because many of its non-specialized programs were accessible by the disabled, because the elimination had the

Dreher Park, for example, involved the elimination, entirely, of all specialized recreational programs for the disabled and the district court's ruling that plaintiffs did not have to establish eligibility to participate in a specific recreational program to challenge that elimination. The court used wheelchair soccer as an example, concluding wheelchair-bound youth did not have to establish they were otherwise able "run" or "kick" to challenge the program's elimination, because the relevant program benefits they were seeking were not simply participation on a soccer team, but the benefits of the City's overall recreational/athletic program.

As a paradigmatic scenario, it may be the case that there are wheelchair-bound children who cannot meet the 'essential requirements' for a soccer team because they cannot run or cannot kick a ball. However, such an analysis would be persuasive only if the full and entire extent of the City's effect of denying disabled individuals programming "needed to give equal benefits of recreation to persons with disabilities." 846 F. Supp. at 991-92. Similarly in Rodde, the Ninth Circuit held the shutting down of defendant's only hospitals designed to serve disabled individuals violated Title II because the services designed for the general population, while available to the disabled, "would not adequately serve the unique needs of the disabled who therefore would be effectively denied services that the non-disabled continued to receive." 357 F.3d at 998. The "benefits" denied plaintiffs in these cases were the benefits of access to meaningful programming, not the quality of access afforded (and access, I might add, not challenged as ineffective or unmeaningful).

recreational program was one soccer team. An “essential eligibility requirement” of a soccer team may be the ability to run and kick, but the only “essential eligibility requirement” of the City’s recreational program (which is the sum of a variety of individual recreational, social, and educational activities and programs) is the request for the benefits of such a program. (Citations omitted.) Therefore, the only ‘essential eligibility requirement’ that Plaintiffs must meet is to request the benefits of a recreational program.

Dreher Park, 846 F. Supp. at 990 (emphasis original). Here, the USOC has not eliminated its Paralympic Team (and doing so would violate its federal charter) and the benefits Plaintiffs seek are not of access to the Olympic experience or participation in elite athletics, but of the quality of their experience as Paralympians compared to the experience of non-disabled Olympians. Dreher Park does not get Plaintiffs there. By refusing to couch their claims in terms of a comparison of separate benefits under 42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(1)(A)(iii), there is simply no basis in the ASA, ADA or relevant case law to avoid the eligibility requirement of Olympic Team membership to claim discrimination in the denial of Olympic Team benefits.¹⁹

¹⁹ In this regard I agree with Defendants that Does 1-5 v. Chandler, 83 F.3d 1150, 1155 (9th Cir. 1996) provides the better analogy. In Chandler, the Ninth Circuit ruled the legislature’s

Next, Plaintiffs argue the criterion used to determine eligibility for Olympic programming (i.e., being selected to the Olympic, as opposed to Paralympic, Team) is invalid because it is facially discriminatory. Resp. at pp. 6-9 (arguing USOC eligibility criteria is invalid because it is a proxy for facial discrimination and is analogous to the inequities Title IX was designed to remedy). I find the argument somewhat facile and the analogy to Title IX inapt. Where factors such as disability or sex render individuals unable to participate without a separate program or participation opportunity, the question becomes one of the effectiveness or equality of the separate benefit and not that the creation of the separate participation opportunity itself is tantamount welfare amendments to provide eligible needy individuals with dependent children benefits for unlimited duration while providing needy disabled individuals benefits for only one year did not violate Title II because disabled individuals' ineligibility for the longer term benefits did not turn on their disabled status. In so holding, the Ninth Circuit rejected appellees' reliance on Dreher Park to argue the proper characterization of the "program" for eligibility purposes was the overall purpose of benefitting the needy. According to the Court, the fact that the non-disabled needy without dependent children were not entitled to funds under the program suggested the proper view was of two discrete forms of benefit providing for two discrete subgroups of the needy population. As in Chandler, the better view of the USOC's purpose in fostering participation and competition in the Olympic/Pan-American and Paralympic Games is oversight over two discrete forms of benefits providing for two discrete subgroups of elite, world-class amateur athletes.

to unlawful discrimination.²⁰ Title III is grounded in this distinction, defining discrimination as the imposition of eligibility criteria that tend to screen out the disabled “unless . . . necessary for the provision of the goods, services, facilities . . . or accommodations being offered”; the failure to modify policies “unless . . . the entity can demonstrate that making modifications would fundamentally alter the nature of such goods, service . . . ”; or failing to take steps to ensure the disabled are not segregated “unless . . . taking such steps would fundamentally alter the nature of the good, service . . . ”. See 42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(2)(i)-(iii). See H.R. Rep. No. 101-485, pt. 1, at 58 (1990), reprinted in 1990 U.S.C.C.A.N. 445, 481 (providing illustrative examples such as a rule that prohibits the deaf or blind from entering a store or requiring customers to present a driver’s license in order to purchase merchandise, because that would screen out persons with disabilities who do not drive). Because Plaintiffs do not challenge Paralympic programming under a separate benefit analysis, their claims hinge on the assertion that no valid basis other than invidious discrimination justifies the “eligibility criteria” of being an Olympian to receive Olympic benefits.

The Necessary “Qualification” of being an Olympian does not Constitute Discrimination under 42 U.S.C. § 1282(b)(2)(A).

The method for challenging a qualification as discriminatory in violation of the ADA and Rehab Act is to show that it either screens out or tends to screen out disabled individuals and is unnecessary or nonessential. See 42 U.S.C.A. § 12182(b)(2)(A)(i); 45 C.F.R. § 84.13 (analogous Rehabilitation Act regulation for challenging criteria that screen out or tend to screen out disabled individuals); see also Pottgen v. Missouri State High Sch. Activities Ass’n, 40 F.3d 926, 930 (8th Cir. 1994) (using “necessary” and “essential” interchangeably in qualification analysis). Assuming the USOC’s eligibility criteria of being an Olympic athlete screens out disabled individuals, the USOC urges it is essential to furthering its purpose of training and obtaining the best Olympic athletes to represent the United States. (Mot. Dismiss at 15.) Plaintiffs respond first by contending a determination of whether the USOC’s eligibility criteria is necessary is inappropriate at this stage because they have not indicated the existence of an affirmative defense in the Amended Complaint. (Resp., p. 14.) Alternatively, Athlete Plaintiffs argue the eligibility criteria is unnecessary because the USOC mandate of training and obtaining the best athletes applies equally to Olympians and Paralympians, and therefore “limiting benefits to Olympic athletes is not necessary for the provision of the benefits being offered.” Id. Both arguments fail.

First, where “the applicability of [an affirmative] defense [is] clearly indicated and . . . appear[s] on the face of the pleading,” a complaint is subject to dismissal on that basis. 5B C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, pp. 708-10 (3d ed. 2004). Here, it is apparent from the allegations in the Complaint that Athlete Plaintiffs are challenging the eligibility criterion used to deny them Olympic programming 42 U.S.C. § 12192(b)(A)(i), which invites the affirmative defense also stated in that statute that such a criterion is permissible if it is shown to be “necessary” for the provision of the accommodations being offered generally. Id. Accordingly, I turn to whether the facts as pleaded render the eligibility criterion of being an Olympic Team member “necessary” to the provision of Olympic programming, generally.

In assessing the necessity of the USOC’s eligibility criteria for Olympic programming, the “goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, or accommodations” that Athlete Plaintiffs were allegedly wrongly denied must be identified. See 42 U.S.C. § 12182(b)(2)(A)(i). Plaintiffs assert the goods, services, facilities, and privileges at issue are the financial and other intangible benefits and training priority given Olympic, as opposed to Paralympic, athletes. (Pls.’ Resp. at 15.) Plaintiffs plead no facts tending to demonstrate these benefits are not “necessary” to the maintenance of the Olympic team, and simply rests on the assertion that the eligibility criterion of selection to the Olympic, as opposed to the Paralympic, team in order to receive Olympic benefits is invalid.

It is here that the concern over the characterization of the Olympic Training Centers as “public accommodations” merges with the necessary elements of a claim under the Rehabilitation Act and ADA. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the ADA requires the USOC to provide anything as a “public accommodation,” it is the opportunity to represent one’s country in a recognized amateur sport in one of three categories of sanctioned (Olympic/Pan-American or Paralympic) competition. See Martin, 532 U.S. at 680 (the PGA provides an opportunity for any golfer, disabled and non-disabled alike, to vie for the opportunity to qualify for the PGA Tour); Henrietta D. v. Bloomberg, 331 F.3d 261, 274 (2d Cir.2003) (the ADA and Rehabilitation Act viewed as “helping individuals with disabilities access public benefits to which both they and those without disabilities are legally entitled”) (emphasis added). And unlike the golfer in Martin who could compete on the PGA Tour with accommodation, Plaintiff Paralympians cannot and do not purport to be able to compete in the Olympics with or without accommodation. Instead, they compete through the separate participation opportunity of representing the United States as Paralympians. Once afforded access to the benefits of the so-called “public accommodation” afforded by Congress through the ASA, the right to the nondiscriminatory provision of Olympic benefits stops.

Simply put, it is irrelevant that the USOC chooses to provide Olympic programming only to Olympic athletes as long as the gateway to that program operates in a nondiscriminatory manner. However unfair the fact that the participation opportunity afforded Plaintiffs as Paralympians does not include full Olympic benefits, Plaintiffs are afforded a participation opportunity defined by their disability, the benefits of which are lesser based not an additional layer of discrimination but by operation of eligibility criteria beyond the reach of the ADA and Rehabilitation Act.

In short, Paralympic athletes' expectations for the equitable allocation of benefits between Paralympians and Olympians competing on behalf of the United States under the auspices of the USOC is not a matter which courts, through the ADA, may mandate or enforce. While much to be desired, such a mandate must derive from the legislative branch or appropriate agency of the Executive. As urged by Plaintiffs' counsel at oral argument, Title IX and its implementing regulations may indeed form an apt analogy – not as infusing the ADA with additional remedies to then be grafted onto the ASA – but as a paradigm for appropriate congressional and agency action.

Based on the foregoing, I conclude that Plaintiffs' Athlete Claims, which challenge the USOC's inequitable allocation of resources and benefits to them as Paralympians compared to those afforded Olympians generally, fail to state a claim upon which relief under the ADA or Rehabilitation Act may be granted. I therefore GRANT Defendants' Motion to Dismiss in Hollonbeck, 03-cv-1364, which in turn disposes of the identical issue presented as a Motion for Summary Judgment in Shepherd, 99-cv-2077.

These cases will be set for a status conference within ten days of the date of this Memorandum Opinion and Order to formulate a pretrial plan for Plaintiffs' remaining claims. In anticipation of this conference, the parties are to submit a brief status report setting forth their respective positions regarding the continued viability of Plaintiffs' Vie Sports Marketing-related claims in the wake of my decision.

ORDER

(Filed Feb. 25, 2008)

Appellants' petition for panel rehearing is denied. Judge Holloway would grant panel rehearing.

The petition for rehearing en banc was transmitted to all of the judges of the court who are in regular active service. Judge Holloway called for a poll on the en banc suggestion and the vote was 6-6. Consequently, the suggestion fails. See Fed. R. App. P. 35(a). The en banc request is accordingly denied. Judges

Henry, Briscoe, Lucero, Murphy, Hartz and O'Brien voted to grant rehearing en banc.
