9 OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

10 Plaintiff,

11 v.

12 CREATIVE NETWORKS, LLC, an 13 Arizona corporation, and RES-CARE,
14 INC., a Kentucky corporation,

15 Defendants.

No. CV 05-3032-PHX-SMM

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION AND ORDER

16 Before the Court is Defendants Creative Networks, LLC and Res-Care, Inc.’s 17 (collectively, “Defendants”) Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (Doc. 97).
18 Having considered the parties’ memoranda and other submissions, the Court now issues 19 this Memorandum of Decision and Order denying Defendants’ motion.<sup>1</sup>

20 FACTUAL BACKGROUND

21 Plaintiff, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (“EEOC”), alleges that 22 Defendants “discriminated against Rhonda Encinas-Castro and Kathryn Allen in 23 retaliation for having opposed discrimination and/or for having participated in a 24 proceeding pursuant to Title VII, including an investigation of alleged employment 25 discrimination.” (Doc. 106) Specifically, Rhonda Encinas-Castro (“Encinas-Castro”)

26
27 <sup>1</sup> Defendants requested oral argument in connection with their Motion for Partial Summary 28 Judgment (Doc. 97). The parties have had the opportunity to submit evidence and briefing.
Accordingly, the Court finds the pending motion for summary judgment suitable for decision without oral argument and Defendants’ request is denied. See LRCiv 7.2(f), 56.2.

1 claims that her employer, Creative Networks, LLC (“Creative Networks”), retaliated
2 against her by firing her for filing a discrimination charge with the EEOC (Doc. 97, 1:25-3 2:1). Kathryn Allen (“Allen”) claims that Creative Networks retaliated against her by 4 holding a corrective counseling session after she was identified as a witness in Encinas-
5 Castro’s EEOC charge (Id. 2:1-4). Defendant Res-Care, Inc. (“Res-Care”) is the parent 6 corporation of Creative Networks.

7         On May 16, 2003, Encinas-Castro filed a charge of discrimination with the EEOC 8 (Pl’s Statement of Facts (PSOF) ¶ 1). After an EEOC representative interviewed 9 Encinas-Castro, she was told that the EEOC would finish the charge and mail it to her for 10 her signature (Id.). Subsequently, Encinas-Castro received the EEOC charge in the mail, 11 and she signed and dated it on Tuesday, May 20, before mailing it back to the EEOC 12 (Id.). The EEOC received the signed charge on Friday, May 23 (Id.). Encinas-Castro’s
13 charge specifically included Allen’s name as a witness to the discriminatory comments 14 (Id. ¶ 2).

15         Upon filing her charge with the EEOC, Encinas-Castro told several coworkers that 16 she had gone to the EEOC to file a charge (Id. ¶ 3). On May 16, the day Encinas-Castro 17 filed her discrimination charge, she advised Millie Santiago that she had gone to the 18 EEOC to file a charge and identified Allen as a witness (Id.; Doc. 106, Ex. 2, Encinas-19 Castro Decl. ¶¶ 5-7). A few days later, on May 19, Encinas-Castro advised Ginger Call 20 (“Call”) that she had gone to the EEOC to file a charge and identified Allen as a witness 21 (PSOF ¶¶ 3, 9). Call was a Project Manager with Creative Networks (Id. ¶ 8). Call then 22 informed Jennifer Clark (“Clark”), Call’s supervisor, that there was a rumor that Encinas-23 Castro was going to file a charge of discrimination with the EEOC (Id. ¶ 10). Clark 24 indicated that she was going to pass the information onto Ron Cornelison (“Cornelison”), 25 Executive Director for Creative Networks (Id. ¶¶ 11, 24). Also, on May 19, Encinas-26 Castro told Bonnie Cooper (“Cooper”) that she had filed an EEOC charge and named 27 Allen as a witness (Id. ¶¶ 3-4). Cooper then told Call that Encinas-Castro had filed a 28

1 charge, and Call told Cooper that she had already elevated the information about the 2 charge to Cornelison (Id. ¶ 4).

3 Sometime after filing her charge, Encinas-Castro informed Allen that she had 4 named her as a witness in the charge and that the EEOC may be contacting her (Id. ¶ 5).
5 In turn, Allen confided in Edna Faulkner (“Faulkner”), Coordinator for the Maricopa 6 Integrated Health Services (“MIHS”) and Division of Developmental Disability 7 (“DDD”), about Encinas-Castro’s charge (Id. ¶¶ 5-6). Allen also told Faulkner that she 8 had been mentioned as a witness in Encinas-Castro’s charge (Id. ¶ 6). On May 29, 2003, 9 Faulkner told Allen that she had been called into a meeting, “they” are aware of Encinas-10 Castro’s charge and “everything is going to really explode now.” (Id. ¶ 7). Allen testified 11 that Faulkner had said Leary and Clark were at the May 29 meeting (Doc. 106, Ex. 5, 12 Allen Dep. 91:16-24).

13 Sometime before May 30, Call spoke again with Clark and Cornelison and advised 14 them of a rumor that Encinas-Castro had gone to the EEOC (PSOF ¶ 12). Cornelison and 15 Clark replied, “Let’s bring [Encinas-Castro] in and have a discussion with her.” (Id.) A 16 meeting with Encinas-Castro was held on May 30 and that same day, Cornelison fired 17 Encinas-Castro (Id. ¶¶ 13-14).

18 After she was fired, Encinas-Castro called Allen and told her about the termination 19 (Doc. 106, Ex.5, Allen Dep. 95:13-14). Minutes later, Faulkner came to Allen’s office 20 and indicated that Cornelison wanted to speak with Allen (Id. 95:14-16). In attendance at 21 this meeting was Allen, Cornelison, Clark, Faulkner, and Operations Manager, Linda 22 Leary (“Leary”) (Id. ¶ 15). The EEOC claims that Cornelison, Clark, and Faulkner all 23 knew about Encinas-Castro’s charge when they met with Allen (PSOF ¶¶ 5-6,9,12).
24 During the meeting, Cornelison told Allen, “I want to tell you something right now, I 25 could fire you right now, because this is a right-to-work state, and I don’t even have to 26 have a reason, but I want to give you a chance to be a successful employee here.” (Id. ¶ 27 16) Cornelison then asked Allen what she knew about Encinas-Castro’s EEOC charge 28 (Id. ¶ 17). When Allen denied knowing anything, Cornelison told Allen, “Well, there’s 1 been talk that you have been calling back and forth to the Surprise office and spreading 2 rumors,' and . . . 'I want to really try and make you successful here,' and . . . 'I, out of all 3 the people in this company since I've started, I've noticed you with a negative attitude.'" 4 (Id. ¶ 18) Prior to the May 30 meeting, Allen had never been disciplined or counseled for 5 performance problems before (Id. ¶ 21).

6 During the meeting, Cornelison allegedly spoke to Allen in a belligerent and 7 hostile manner (Id. ¶ 22). Since Encinas-Castro worked in the Surprise office until her 8 termination, Allen took the reference to her communications with the Surprise office to 9 mean her conversations with Encinas-Castro about the discrimination (Id. ¶ 20). Faulkner 10 also took the comments about the Surprise office to mean Allen's conversations with 11 Encinas-Castro, since the two women were friends (Id. ¶ 30). At the end of the meeting, 12 Cornelison indicated that he was going to have Faulkner monitor Allen in the future (Id.
13 ¶ 34).

14 Allen believed her job was threatened based upon (1) Cornelison's statement that 15 Allen could be fired "right now" because "Arizona is a right-to-work state"; (2) the 16 reference by Cornelison to the EEOC charge filed by Encinas-Castro shortly after her 17 termination earlier in the day; (3) Cornelison's angry and hostile demeanor; and (4) 18 Encinas-Castro's termination on the same day (Id. ¶ 23). During the meeting, Allen never 19 acknowledged that she had a poor attitude or that she would improve her job 20 performance. (Id. ¶ 33) Leary told Allen that the meeting was not related to Allen's job 21 performance (Id.).

22 Two months later, Allen quit her job, despite receiving no further counseling 23 (Def.'s Statement of Facts ("DSOF") ¶ 19). After Allen gave Faulkner her notice of 24 resignation, she did not return to work the last two weeks (Id.).

25 PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

26
27
28

1 Allen filed a complaint against Defendants with the EEOC on June 3, 2003 (Doc.
2 97, Ex. A).<sup>2</sup> On September 30, 2005, the EEOC filed suit, on behalf of Allen, under Title 3 VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, and Title I of the Civil Rights Act of 4 1991 (Doc. 1). The EEOC alleged that Defendants subjected Allen to adverse 5 employment actions in retaliation for opposing what she reasonably believed was 6 discrimination and/or participating in a proceeding pursuant to Title VII, including being 7 named as a witness in Encinas-Castro's charge of discrimination (Doc. 1, ¶ 10). The 8 alleged retaliatory acts included discipline and threats of termination (Id.).

9 STANDARD OF REVIEW

10 A court must grant summary judgment if the pleadings and supporting documents, 11 viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, "show that there is no genuine 12 issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter 13 of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c); see Celotex Corp v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23 (1986); 14 Jesinger v. Nev. Fed. Credit Union, 24 F.3d 1127, 1130 (9th Cir. 1994). Substantive law 15 determines which facts are material. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 248 16 (1986); see also Jesinger, 24 F.3d at 1130. "Only disputes over facts that might affect the 17 outcome of the suit under the governing law will properly preclude the entry of summary 18 judgment." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The dispute must also be genuine, that is, the 19 evidence must be "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving 20 party." Id.; see Jesinger, 24 F.3d at 1130.

21 A principal purpose of summary judgment is "to isolate and dispose of factually 22 unsupported claims." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323-24. Summary judgment is appropriate 23 against a party who "fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an 24 _____

25 <sup>2</sup>This complaint alleged that after Allen's name was referenced in Encinas-Castro's 26 EEOC charge, Allen was called into a meeting with Cornelison, Faulkner, Clark, and Leary 27 (Doc. 97, Ex. A). During the meeting, "Cornelison made false accusations about me, advised 28 me my work performance would be monitored, and threatened to terminate my employment." (Id.) Additionally, "Cornelison harassed me and intimidated me by advising me that Arizona is a right to work state and he could terminated [sic] my employment at any time." (Id.)

1 element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of 2 proof at trial." Id. at 322; see also Citadel Holding Corp. v. Roven, 26 F.3d 960, 964 (9th 3 Cir. 1994). The moving party need not disprove matters on which the opponent has the 4 burden of proof at trial. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323-24. The party opposing summary 5 judgment need not produce evidence "in a form that would be admissible at trial in order 6 to avoid summary judgment." Id. at 324. However, the nonmovant "may not rest upon 7 the mere allegations or denials of [the party's] pleadings, but . . . must set forth specific 8 facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e); see Matsushita 9 Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 585-88 (1986); Brinson v.
10 Linda Rose Joint Venture, 53 F.3d 1044, 1049 (9th Cir. 1995).

11 DISCUSSION

12 Defendants seek partial summary judgment on the EEOC's claim of retaliation 13 related to Allen, asserting there are no genuine issues of material fact from which a jury 14 could conclude that Defendants retaliated against Allen in violation of Title VII.
15 Specifically, Defendants assert that the EEOC cannot establish a prima facie case of Title 16 VII retaliation as to Allen for two reasons: (1) the counseling session was not an adverse 17 employment action and (2) the EEOC cannot establish a causal link between Allen's 18 name appearing in Encinas-Castro's EEOC charge and the alleged retaliatory act of the 19 May 30, 2003 counseling session (Doc. 97, 5:3-7).

20 I. Preliminary Evidentiary Issues

21 Defendants ask the Court to disregard the declarations submitted by Encinas-22 Castro and Allen as self-serving and contradictory of their deposition testimony (Doc.
23 128, 7:11:13, 8:1-10). The Court finds that consideration of the declarations submitted by 24 Encinas-Castro and Allen is appropriate under Ninth Circuit caselaw. In SEC v. Phan, 25 the Ninth Circuit pointed out that declarations often are "self-serving" "[a]nd properly so, 26 because otherwise there would be no point in submitting [them]." 500 F.3d 895, 909 (9th 27 Cir. 2007). As a result, [t]hat an affidavit is self-serving bears on its credibility, not on its 28 cognizability for purposes of establishing a genuine issue of material fact." Id. A court

1 can disregard a self-serving declaration at summary judgment only in certain situations, 2 such as when a declaration offers only conclusions, or is based upon facts outside the 3 declarant's personal knowledge. Id. Here, the declarations are properly based upon 4 Encinas-Castro and Allen's own actions about which they have personal knowledge (Doc.
5 106, Ex. 2, Encinas-Castro Decl; Doc. 106, Ex. 6, Allen Decl).

6 Nor is the fact that much of Encinas-Castro and Allen's declarations describe 7 conversations held with other Creative Networks employees that cannot otherwise be 8 corroborated a defect. As the court pointed out in Phan, this is not unusual and is likely to 9 be the case with most conversations. 500 F.3d at 910. As a result, the participant is not 10 disqualified from testifying about the exchange, subject to a credibility determination by 11 the finder of fact. Id. Since a court does not judge credibility, such self-serving 12 declarations can create a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to defeat summary 13 judgment. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250 ("Credibility determinations, the weighing of the 14 evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not 15 those of a judge, whether he is ruling on a motion for summary judgment or for a directed 16 verdict.").

17 Moreover, Defendants argue that the declarations contradict Encinas-Castro and 18 Allen's deposition testimony (Doc. 128, 7:11:13, 8:1-10). Defendants are correct that a 19 party cannot create a genuine issue of material fact by contradicting his earlier deposition 20 testimony. See Leslie v. Grupo ICA, 198 F.3d 1152, 1157 (9th Cir. 1999); Block v. City 21 of L.A., 253 F.3d 410, 419 n.2 (9th Cir. 2001). However, the example given by 22 Defendants in their Reply does not demonstrate any such contradiction (Doc. 128, n.5).
23 In her deposition testimony on June 13, 2007, Encinas-Castro testified that she told Call 24 that she had gone to the EEOC to file a charge of discrimination (Doc. 128, Ex. E, 25 Encinas-Castro Dep. 87:21-88:8). In her later declaration, Encinas-Castro stated that she 26 told Call that she had gone to the EEOC to file a charge and that Allen's name was 27 referenced in the charge (Doc. 106, Ex. 2, Encinas-Castro Decl. ¶ 5). Encinas-Castro's 28 declaration elaborates on her conversations with Call and other managers and provides

1 additional detail of the content of those conversations. Allen’s declaration similarly 2 provides further explanation of the May 30 meeting without being contradictory of her 3 earlier deposition (Doc. 106, Ex. 6, Allen Decl.). Therefore, the Court will consider both 4 of the declarations when deciding the present summary judgment motion.

5 II. Retaliation

7 The EEOC alleges retaliation in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 8 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. Title VII makes it an unlawful employment practice for 9 an employer to discriminate against an individual because she has opposed any 10 employment practice made unlawful by Title VII, or because she has made a charge, 11 testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation under Title VII. 42 12 U.S.C. § 2000e-3(a). To establish a prima facie retaliation claim under Title VII, an 13 employee must show that (1) she engaged in a protected activity; (2) her employer 14 subjected her to an adverse employment action; and (3) a causal link exists between the 15 protected activity and the adverse action. Passantino v. Johnson & Johnson Consumer 16 Prods., Inc., 212 F.3d 493, 506 (9th Cir. 2000); Ray v. Henderson, 217 F.3d 1234, 1240
17 (9th Cir. 2000); Little v. Windermere Relocation, Inc., 301 F.3d 958, 969 (9th Cir. 2002).
18 To show the requisite causal link, the plaintiff must present sufficient evidence to raise an 19 inference that the protected activity was the likely reason for the adverse action. Cohen v.
20 Fred Meyer, 686 F.2d 793, 796 (9th Cir. 1982). Essential to such a showing is evidence 21 that the employer was aware that the plaintiff had engaged in protected activity. Id.

22 If a plaintiff has shown a prima facie retaliation claim, then the burden shifts to the 23 defendant to furnish legitimate nondiscriminatory reasons for the adverse employment 24 action. Ray, 217 F.3d at 1240. If the defendant meets that burden, then the plaintiff bears 25 the ultimate burden of demonstrating that the reason was merely a pretext for a 26 discriminatory motive. Id. The plaintiff may show pretext “either directly by persuading 27 the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by 28 showing that the employer’s proffered explanation is unworthy of credence.” Villiarimo

1 v. Aloha Island Air, Inc., 281 F.3d 1054, 1062 (9th Cir. 2002). Circumstantial evidence 2 relied on to show pretext must be “both specific and substantial.” Id.

3 A. Protected Activity

4 Although Defendants dispute that being referenced in an EEOC charge constitutes 5 a protected activity, this argument was raised for the first time in their Reply (Doc. 121, 6 4:14-17; 7:9-10). The EEOC was unable to respond to these new arguments, and 7 therefore, the Court declines to consider them. See Lane v. Dept. of Interior, 523 F.3d 8 1128, 1140 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting that it is in the district court’s discretion whether to 9 consider an argument first raised in a reply brief).

10 B. Adverse Employment Action

11 Defendants argue that the EEOC cannot present evidence on the second and third 12 elements: that Allen experienced an adverse employment action or that there is a causal 13 link between a protected activity and the adverse employment action (Doc. 97, 5:3-7). To 14 establish an adverse employment action, the EEOC asserts that Defendants subjected 15 Allen to adverse conditions after she was named in Encinas-Castro’s EEOC charge by 16 holding the May 30 counseling session (Doc. 106, 8:6-28). The United States Supreme 17 Court has held that a plaintiff must demonstrate that a reasonable employee would have 18 found the challenged action materially adverse, meaning conduct that would “dissuade a 19 reasonable worker from making or supporting a charge of discrimination.” Burlington 20 Northern Santa Fe Railroad Co. v. White, 548 U.S. 53, 68 (2006) (citations omitted).

21 Defendants assert that the May 30 meeting was held to modify Allen’s poor job 22 performance through counseling (Doc. 97, 7:17-18). Any mention of termination by 23 Cornelison was not a threat, but rather a possible consequence if Allen did not improve 24 her job performance (Id. 7:6-11; DSOF ¶ 14). Furthermore, Defendants contend that 25 Allen was never suspended, demoted, or the recipient of a bad performance review (Doc.
26 97, 7:12-13). In the company’s view, the counseling session was viewed as a success 27
28

1 because no further criticism of Allen was ever reported (Id. 7:14-16). According to 2 Defendants, nothing at the meeting rose to the level of conduct that would dissuade a 3 reasonable worker from making or supporting a charge of discrimination, and thus, there 4 was no adverse employment action to support a retaliation claim (Id. 7:18-22).

5 In response, the EEOC alleges that the purpose of the meeting was not to address 6 Allen’s job performance, but rather to threaten Allen’s job as a way of deterring any 7 future assistance of Encinas-Castro’s discrimination charge (Doc. 106, 8:12-15). On the 8 same day that Cornelison fired Encinas-Castro, he arranged a meeting with Allen and 9 three other Creative Networks managers (Id. 8:15-16). Cornelison allegedly stated, “I 10 want to tell you something right now, I could fire you right now, because this is a right-11 to-work state, and I don’t even have to have a reason, but I want to give you a chance to 12 be a successful employee here.” (Id. 8:17-19; PSOF ¶ 16) Cornelison’s manner 13 throughout the meeting was supposedly belligerent and hostile towards Allen (Doc.
14 106,8:21; PSOF ¶22). Cornelison allegedly later asked Allen whether she “knew 15 anything about this EEOC charge.” (Doc. 106, 8:22; PSOF ¶ 17) When she answered 16 no, Cornelison said, “Well, there’s been talk that you have been calling back and forth to 17 the Surprise office and spreading rumors.” (Doc. 106, 8:23-24; PSOF ¶ 18) Allen had 18 never been disciplined previously and Cornelison allegedly did not identify any 19 performance issues at the May 30 meeting (Doc. 106, 8:19-20; PSOF ¶ 21). The meeting 20 ended by warning Allen that Faulkner would be monitoring her work going forward (Doc.
21 106, 8:26-28; PSOF ¶ 34).

22 As to this second element of a prima facie retaliation claim, the EEOC has 23 established a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Allen suffered an adverse 24 employment action. The threats of termination and hostile conduct at the May 30 meeting 25 is reasonably likely to deter others from engaging in protected activity. See Ray, 217 26 F.3d at 1243.

1           C.     Causal Link

2           To establish causation, the EEOC relies heavily on timing. Proximity of time 3 between protected activity and an adverse action may support an inference of causation.
4 Ray, 217 F.3d at 1244. “Evidence based on timing can be sufficient to let the issue go to 5 the jury, even in the face of alternative reasons proffered by the defendant.” Passantino, 6 212 F.3d at 507 (citation omitted). “It is [also] important to emphasize that it is 7 causation, not temporal proximity itself, that is an element of plaintiff’s prima facie case, 8 and temporal proximity merely provides an evidentiary basis from which an inference can 9 be drawn.” Porter v. Cal. Dept. of Corr., 419 F.3d 885, 895 (9th Cir. 2005) (emphasis 10 added) (citing Kachmar v. SunGard Data Sys., Inc., 109 F.3d 173, 177 (3d Cir. 1997)).
11 Thus, the Court must look not only to timing but to all of the circumstances to determine 12 whether an inference of causation is possible. See Coszalter v. City of Salem, 320 F.3d 13 968, 978 (9th Cir. 2003).

14           Defendants argue that the EEOC has no evidence to establish the necessary causal 15 link between the EEOC charge filed by Encinas-Castro that referenced Allen and any 16 retaliatory conduct directed at Allen in the May 30 meeting (Doc. 97, 5:23-25).
17 Defendants contend that without evidence that the employer knew about an employee’s 18 protected activity when it took an adverse employment action, the causal link is missing 19 and a Title VII retaliation claim cannot be established by Allen (Id. 5:25-6:1). See 20 Cohen, 686 F.2d at 796.

21           In the present case, Defendants claim that none of the participants at the May 30 22 meeting learned of Allen’s association with Encinas-Castro’s discrimination charge until 23 five days later when Creative Networks received the charge in the mail on June 4 (Doc.
24 97, 6:4-6; DSOF ¶¶ 3-6). Specifically, Faulkner stated at her deposition that the subject 25 of Allen’s connection to the EEOC charge was not discussed at the May 30 meeting with 26 Allen (DSOF ¶ 5). Cornelison stated that the rumor of Encinas-Castro going to the EEOC 27 was discussed in the May 30 meeting with Encinas-Castro, but not in the meeting with 28

1 Allen later that day (Id. ¶ 6). As a result, Defendants could not engage in retaliatory 2 conduct if they did not know of Allen’s involvement with the Title VII charge (Doc. 97, 3 6:6-9).

4 The EEOC responds by noting the close time proximity between the filing of 5 Encinas-Castro’s EEOC charge on May 16, 2003 referencing Allen as a witness and the 6 subsequent May 30, 2003 counseling session with Allen (Doc. 106, 5:22-24). According 7 to the EEOC, this temporal proximity, when combined with evidence that Encinas-Castro 8 told several people about her charge and Allen’s inclusion in it, raises a genuine issue of 9 material fact as to whether Defendants were aware of the charge and Allen being named 10 as a witness prior to the May 30 meeting (Id. 5:24-28).

11 Indeed, the EEOC has presented sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of 12 material fact with regards to the causal nexus between the protected activity and the 13 adverse employment action. In regards to timing, Encinas-Castro filed her charge of 14 discrimination with the EEOC on May 16, 2003 (PSOF ¶¶ 1,15). Allen’s name was 15 included in the charge as a witness (Id.). Less than two weeks later, on May 30, Allen 16 was summoned to a meeting with Cornelison, Faulkner, Clark, and Leary (PSOF ¶ 15).
17 At this meeting, Cornelison allegedly inquired whether Allen knew anything about 18 Encinas-Castro’s EEOC charge and threatened to terminate her for spreading rumors with 19 the Surprise office, where Encinas-Castro worked (PSOF ¶¶ 16-18).

20
21 Furthermore, there is evidence that three managers present at the May 30 meeting 22 knew about Encinas-Castro’s EEOC charge, including Cornelison, Clark, and Faulkner.
23 After Encinas-Castro informed Allen about the charge, Allen told Faulkner that Encinas-24 Castro had filed a charge with the EEOC and listed Allen as a witness (Doc. 106, 6:6-8; 25 PSOF ¶¶ 5-6). On May 19, 2003, Encinas-Castro told Call about her charge and the 26 inclusion of Allen’s name as a witness (Doc. 106, 6:12-15; PSOF ¶ 9). Call then advised 27 Cornelison and Clark about the discrimination charge (Doc. 106, 6:15-16; PSOF ¶ 12).
28 This same evidence also indicates that at least one manager, Faulkner, knew Allen’s name

1 was referenced as a witness (PSOF ¶¶ 5-6). As a result, the EEOC's evidence is 2 sufficient to create a prima facie case of retaliation under Title VII. See Chuang v. Univ.
3 of Cal. Davis, Bd. of Trustees., 225 F.3d 1115, 1124 (9th Cir. 2000) ("Under the 4 McDonnell Douglas framework, '[t]he requisite degree of proof necessary to establish a 5 prima facie case for Title VII . . . on summary judgment is minimal and does not even 6 need to rise to the level of a preponderance of the evidence.'") (quotation omitted).

7 D. Pretext

8 Defendants did not make an argument regarding pretext for retaliation in its 9 motion for summary judgment. In its motion for summary judgment, Defendants mainly 10 argued that the EEOC could not establish a prima facie case for retaliation. Because the 11 EEOC has established a prima facie case of retaliation, Defendants' motion for summary 12 judgment is denied. However, as the issues regarding a legitimate nondiscriminatory 13 reason and pretext should be addressed as a matter of law before engaging in pretrial 14 matters, the Court will allow the parties to file an additional motion for summary 15 judgment, if they so desire.

16 CONCLUSION

18 Summary judgment is not proper as to Kathryn Allen's claim for retaliation under 19 Title VII because the EEOC has demonstrated a prima facie case for the retaliation claim.

20 Accordingly,

21 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED DENYING Defendants Creative Networks, LLC
22 and Res-Care, Inc.'s Motion for Partial Summary Judgment (Doc. 97).

23 IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the parties may file a motion for summary 24 judgment regarding the issues of legitimate nondiscriminatory reasons and pretext for 25 Allen's retaliation claim by April 10, 2009, if they so desire.
