

In some cases, sex harassment takes the form of hostility towards pregnant women in the workplace. When the President/CEO of a Reston, Virginia-based provider of online banking software learned that a Regional Sales Manager was pregnant, he regularly made inappropriate and offensive comments, including saying that women could not be in sales after giving birth and offering to bet that the manager would not make any sales after giving birth. Under a consent decree, the company will pay the manager $59,000 and is prohibited from future sex discrimination. EEOC v. IntelliData Techs. Corp. (E.D. Va. May 19, 2005)