

No. 17-965

---

---

In the Supreme Court of the United States

---

DONALD J. TRUMP, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, et al., Petitioners,

v.

STATE OF HAWAII, et al.,
Respondents.

---

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

---

BRIEF FOR THE AMERICAN CIVIL RIGHTS UNION AS
AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONERS

---

KENNETH A. KLUKOWSKI
Counsel of Record
AMERICAN CIVIL RIGHTS UNION
3213 Duke Street #625
Alexandria, Virginia 22314
Telephone (877) 730-2278
kklukowski@theacru.org

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

February 28, 2018

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The questions presented are:

1. Whether Respondents' challenge to the President's suspension of entry of aliens abroad is justiciable.
2. Whether the Proclamation is a lawful exercise of the President's authority to suspend entry of aliens abroad.
3. Whether the Proclamation violates the Establishment Clause.
4. Whether the global injunction is impermissibly overbroad.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

QUESTIONS PRESENTED .....	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES .....	iv
INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE .....	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT .....	2
ARGUMENT .....	4
I. IN TOWN OF GREECE , THIS COURT ABANDONED THE LEMON /ENDORSEMENT TEST IN FAVOR OF A HISTORICALLY GROUNDED INQUIRY. ....	5
A. The Court’s recent Establishment Clause cases increasingly look to history and coercion, and away from Lemon and the “endorsement test.” .....	6
B. Justices of this Court frequently criticize the Lemon /endorsement test. ....	11
C. A broad consensus of scholars spanning the spectrum of legal thought agree that the Lemon /endorsement test is fatally flawed. ....	13
D. While the prior Administration urged the Court to decide Town of Greece on Marsh alone, the Court instead responded to Petitioner’s and amici ’s urging to opine on Lemon . ....	19
II. PRESIDENTIAL PROCLAMATION 9645 SATISFIES THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE TEST SET FORTH IN TOWN OF GREECE . ....	23

A.	The Proclamation is consistent with the historical meaning of the Establishment Clause. . . . .	24
B.	The Proclamation does not coerce persons in the United States to participate in a religious exercise. . . . .	25
III.	THE PROCLAMATION LIKEWISE SATISFIES THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE UNDER ANY TEST THE COURT COULD APPLY. . . . .	27
A.	Agostini requires inferior courts to follow errant precedents that are directly on point until this Court overrules them. . .	27
B.	The Proclamation is also permissible under Larson . . . . .	29
	CONCLUSION . . . . .	31

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp , 374 U.S. 203 (1963) . . . . .	15, 16
Agostini v. Felton , 521 U.S. 203 (1997) . . . . .	7, 27, 28
Am. Atheists, Inc. v. Duncan , 637 F.3d 1095 (10th Cir. 2010) . . . . .	13
ACLU v. Mercer Cty. , 432 F.3d 624 (6th Cir. 2005) . . . . .	13
ACLU Neb. Found. v. City of Plattsmouth , 419 F.3d 772 (8th Cir. 2005) . . . . .	10
Corporation of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints v. Amos , 483 U.S. 327 (1987) . . . . .	12
County of Allegheny v. ACLU, Greater Pittsburgh Chapter , 492 U.S. 573 (1989) . . . . .	passim
Cressman v. Thompson , 798 F.3d 938 (10th Cir. 2015) . . . . .	22
Elmbrook Sch. Dist. v. Doe , 134 S. Ct. 2283 (2014) . . . . .	27
Engel v. Vitale , 370 U.S. 421 (1962) . . . . .	23
Galloway v. Town of Greece , 681 F.3d 20 (2d Cir. 2012) . . . . .	19

Glassroth v. Moore , 335 F.3d 1282 (11th Cir. 2003) . . . . .	13
Henry v. Lehman Commer. Paper., Inc. , 471 F.3d 977 (9th Cir. 2006) . . . . .	4
Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church &amp; School v. EEOC , 565 U.S. 171 (2012) . . . . .	10
Hunt v. McNair , 413 U.S. 734 (1973) . . . . .	11
Kerry v. Din , 135 S. Ct. 2128 (2015) . . . . .	4
Kleindienst v. Mandel , 408 U.S. 753 (1972) . . . . .	4, 29
Lamb’s Chapel v. Ctr. Moriches Union Free Sch. Dist. , 508 U.S. 384 (1993) . . . . .	12
Landon v. Plasencia , 459 U.S. 21 (1982) . . . . .	4
Larson v. Valente , 456 U.S. 228 (1982) . . . . .	29
Lee v. Weisman , 505 U.S. 577 (1992) . . . . .	9, 11, 19
Lemon v. Kurtzman , 403 U.S. 602 (1971) . . . . .	passim
Lund v. Rowan Cty. , 837 F.3d 407 (4th Cir. 2016), aff’d en banc 863 F.3d 268 (4th Cir. 2017) . . . . .	8

Lynch v. Donnelly , 465 U.S. 668 (1984) .....	11, 16
Marks v. United States , 430 U.S. 188 (1977) .....	23
Marsh v. Chambers , 463 U.S. 783 (1983) .....	9, 19, 20, 21
McCreary Cty. v. ACLU of Ky. , 545 U.S. 844 (2005) .....	passim
Mitchell v. Helms , 530 U.S. 793 (2000) .....	7
Mt. Soledad Mem'l Ass'n v. Trunk , 567 U.S. 944 (2012) .....	12, 13
Myers v. Loudoun Cty. Pub. Schs. , 418 F.3d 395 (4th Cir. 2005) .....	10
Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc. , 490 U.S. 477 (1989) .....	28
Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe , 530 U.S. 290 (2000) .....	7
Smith v. Jefferson Cty. Bd. of Sch. Comm'rs , 788 F.3d 580 (6th Cir. 2015) .....	13, 22, 23
Tearpock-Martini v. Borough of Shickshinny , 756 F.3d 232 (3d Cir. 2014) .....	22
Town of Greece v. Galloway , 134 S. Ct. 1811 (2014) .....	passim
Trunk v. San Diego , 629 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2011) .....	10

United States v. Verdugo-Urquidez,
494 U.S. 259 (1990) . . . . . 4

Utah Highway Patrol Ass’n v. Am. Atheists, Inc.,
565 U.S. 994 (2011) . . . . . 9, 12

Van Orden v. Perry,
545 U.S. 677 (2005) . . . . . 9, 10, 12

Wallace v. Jaffree,
472 U.S. 38 (1985) . . . . . 12, 14

CONSTITUTION

U.S. CONST. amend. I, cl. 1 . . . . . 5

STATUTES

Immigration and Nationality Act,
8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq . . . . . 4

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Brief for Indiana Supp. Pet’r, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696) . . . . . 20

Brief for Members of Congress Supp. Pet’r, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696) . . . . . 21

Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696) . . . . . 20

Jesse H. Choper, The Endorsement Test: Its Status and Desirability, 18 J.L. & POL. 499 (2002) . . . 17

Executive Order 13769, 82 Fed. Reg. 8,977
(Feb. 1, 2017) . . . . . 25, 26

Executive Order 13780, 82 Fed. Reg. 13,209
(Mar. 9, 2017) . . . . . 25, 26

Steven G. Gey, Religious Coercion and the Establishment Clause , 1994 U. ILL. L. REV. 463 .....	16, 17
Kenneth A. Klukowski, In Whose Name We Pray: Fixing the Establishment Clause Train Wreck Involving Legislative Prayer , 6 GEO. J.L. & PUB. POL'Y 219 (2008) .....	13, 14
LEONARD LEVY, THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE: RELIGION AND THE FIRST AMENDMENT (1986) ..	14
Michael W. McConnell, Coercion: The Lost Element of Establishment , 27 WM. & MARY L. REV. 933 (1986) .....	15
Michael W. McConnell, Religious Freedom at a Crossroads , 59 U. CHI. L. REV. 115 (1992) .	14, 15
Petitioner's Brief, Town of Greece , 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696) .....	20
Pls.' Mot. Summ. J., Galloway v. Town of Greece , 732 F. Supp. 2d 195 (W.D.N.Y. 2010) (No. 08-cv-6088) .....	19
Presidential Proclamation 9645 .....	passim
Resp't Br., Town of Greece , 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696) .....	19
Steven D. Smith, Separation and the "Secular": Reconstructing the Disestablishment Decision , 67 TEX. L. REV. 955 (1989) .....	15, 16
Transcript of Oral Argument, Town of Greece , 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696) .....	19, 20

Laurence H. Tribe, Constitutional Calculus: Equal Justice or Economic Efficiency?, 98 HARV. L.
REV. 592 (1985) ..... 16

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE<sup>1</sup>

The American Civil Rights Union (ACRU) is a nonpartisan 501(c)(3) nonprofit public-policy organization dedicated to protecting constitutional liberty. Incorporated in Washington, D.C., the ACRU is dedicated to promoting originalism: that in the United States' democratic republic, the only legitimate way for politically unaccountable federal judges to interpret the law is in accordance with the original public meaning of its terms. Courts ascertain the original meaning of the Constitution and lesser laws by consulting the text, structure, and history of the document to determine the meaning that ordinary American citizens of reasonable education and public awareness would have understood those terms to mean at the time they were democratically adopted.

The ACRU Policy Board sets the policy priorities of the organization. Members include former Attorney General Edwin Meese III, former Assistant Attorneys General Charles J. Cooper and William Bradford Reynolds, and former U.S. Ambassador J. Kenneth Blackwell. These statesmen are accomplished leaders regarding immigration policy, national security, and Religion Clauses jurisprudence.

The ACRU has three specific interests here. First, advocating strict adherence to the requirements of Article III regarding lawsuits that are properly <sup>1</sup> Amicus Curiae American Civil Rights Union certifies that all parties have consented to the filing of this brief, and were timely notified. No party or counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no person or entity other than the American Civil Rights Union contributed any money to fund the preparation or submission of this brief.

---

justiciable. Second, ensuring that the most qualified federal officers are making decisions on immigration policy, meaning here that Congress has plenary authority to set immigration policy, and has conferred vast discretion on the President to make the specific decisions implicated in this litigation. And third, advocating an interpretation of the First Amendment's Establishment Clause that comports with the historical understanding of that constitutional guarantee. That third interest is the focus of this amicus brief.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The courts below applied the wrong Establishment Clause test. This Court in Town of Greece v. Galloway, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (2014), abandoned the test applied by the Fourth Circuit here, restoring an Establishment Clause inquiry that looks to history and determines whether plaintiffs in the litigation are being coerced by the government to participate in a religion or religious exercise against their conscience.<sup>2</sup>

The courts below in this and related litigation have applied the wrong standard by looking to whether the Presidential Proclamation had a secular purpose or whether it endorsed a particular religious message. This Court in Town of Greece jettisoned those errant lines of cases and abandoned their forms of inquiry. That 2014 decision restored a historically grounded approach to the Establishment Clause, under which the Constitution is violated if a government action involving religion would have been regarded as an official establishment of religion in 1791. Three Justices added that a historically accepted action might also be problematic if it coerces a person to engage in a religious exercise.

---

<sup>2</sup> Although the Ninth Circuit decided the legal challenge before it on statutory grounds, and thus did not reach the constitutional question in the case, this brief's arguments are directed against the judgments of both the Fourth and the Ninth Circuits, and seeks a judgment from this Court reversing both of them.

This Court has increasingly eschewed any version of Lemon in deciding Establishment Clause cases. Justices of this Court have roundly criticized Lemon, whether merely looking askance at it, or outright calling for overruling it. Likewise, a wide-ranging array of legal scholars spanning the entire jurisprudential spectrum subjects Lemon to scathing commentary. When the Court had the option in Town of Greece of going beyond legislative prayer, the Court instead spoke to the broader issues relevant here. The Court should not now stray from its current approach of looking to history by resuscitating a problematic and discredited line of cases in deciding this case.

There is no question that Presidential Proclamation 9645 is not a religious establishment by historical standards, nor does it coerce any of the Respondents here. Beyond the fact that Respondents presented no evidence that would satisfy the correct analysis, they do not even allege that the President's Proclamation violates this constitutional standard.

Despite the Court's recent refining of Establishment Clause jurisprudence, if there were any precedent from the Court directly on point, inferior courts would be required to follow that wrongly decided case until this Court explicitly overrules it. But this case presents a question of first impression, therefore inferior courts are bound by this Court's rule from Town of Greece:

“Any test the Court adopts must acknowledge a practice that was accepted by the Framers and has withstood the critical scrutiny of time and political change.” All of the inferior courts in these consolidated cases were required to adopt that approach to answer this novel constitutional question. Given that there is no evidence—or even allegation—that Presidential Proclamation 9645 violates the Establishment Clause under the controlling test, this Court should reverse the courts below.

ARGUMENT

The Court should not reach the Establishment Clause question presented in this case for the reasons set forth by the President in the Federal Petitioners’ opening brief.<sup>3</sup> But if a court were to (incorrectly) conclude that IRAP and Hawaii are justiciable cases, then (correctly) conclude that the EO is consistent with the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1101 et seq. (INA), and thereby reach the constitutional <sup>3</sup> Some of these reasons pertain to threshold issues. Others show that the various provisions of the Bill of Rights—including the Establishment Clause—do not apply to facially neutral immigration statutes and administrative actions. See United States v. Verdugo-Urquidez, 494 U.S. 259, 265 (1990); Landon v. Plasencia, 459 U.S. 21, 32 (1982); Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753, 763 (1972). Executive Order 13780, 82 Fed. Reg. 13,209 (Mar. 9, 2017) (the “EO”), therefore does not implicate the Establishment Clause. The Court’s more recent pronouncement in Kerry v. Din, 135 S. Ct. 2128 (2015), does not change that result. See U.S. Brief at 62–70. While Amicus American Civil Rights Union agrees with the President’s arguments on each of the five questions before the Court in this litigation, this brief is exclusively focused on Question 3 in the Petition.

---

issue, that court must then apply the correct test. The courts below failed to do so.<sup>4</sup>

“Any test the Court adopts must acknowledge a practice that was accepted by the Framers and has withstood the critical scrutiny of time and political change.” Town of Greece v. Galloway, 134 S. Ct. 1811, 1819 (2014) (emphasis added). The lower courts applied an older test from other Establishment Clause contexts—a version of the so-called Lemon test—that violates the Court’s rule.

I. IN TOWN OF GREECE, THIS COURT ABANDONED THE LEMON/ENDORSEMENT TEST IN FAVOR OF A HISTORICALLY GROUNDED INQUIRY.

The Establishment Clause commands that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.” U.S. CONST. amend. I, cl. 1. The President is correct that, even if the Court holds that all other issues are satisfied and thus reaches the constitutional question in the case, Presidential Proclamation 9645 is permissible even under previous decades of Establishment Clause jurisprudence, <sup>4</sup> The Ninth Circuit held that the Proclamation is impermissible under federal statute, and therefore never reached the constitutional question here. Pet. App. 64a–65a. However, like other federal appellate courts, the Ninth Circuit holds it may affirm the district court’s judgment against the President “on any basis fairly supported by the record,” Henry v. Lehman Commer. Paper., Inc., 471 F.3d 977, 995 (9th Cir. 2006). The court of appeals could therefore persist in thwarting the President’s policy codified in the Proclamation if this Court reverses the Ninth Circuit’s statutory ruling. If this Court holds that this case is justiciable, it should accordingly include in its decision a clear holding that the Proclamation is consistent with the Establishment Clause.

---

characterized alternatively as the Lemon test or the endorsement test (both described infra in Part II). See U.S. Brief at 64–71.

However, in Town of Greece, the Court jettisoned that ahistorical and hopelessly subjective test in favor of one that looks to history and coercion. Presidential Proclamation 9645 is a fortiori constitutional under the historically grounded analytical framework resuscitated in Town of Greece. This Court should not construe the Solicitor General’s brief as a concession that Lemon controls. It does not. Under the analysis that does control, the from Town of Greece, it is even more clear that the President’s Proclamation is constitutional.

A. The Court’s recent Establishment Clause cases increasingly look to history and coercion, and away from Lemon and the “endorsement test.”

1. Until recently, the Supreme Court would often apply the so-called Lemon test when deciding Establishment Clause claims, under which government action violates the Establishment Clause if it (1) lacks a “secular legislative purpose,” (2) has a principal effect that advances religion, or (3) fosters “excessive entanglement” between government and religion. Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612–13 (1971). The test proved so unworkable that the Court finally revised it into the “endorsement test” in County of Allegheny v. ACLU, Greater Pittsburgh Chapter, 492 U.S. 573 (1989). Under this test, a court asks “whether the challenged governmental practice has the purpose or effect of ‘endorsing’ religion.” Id. at 592. This variation of Lemon predicates the endorsement test on the premise that the Establishment Clause “prohibits government from appearing to take a position on questions of religious belief or from making adherence to a religion relevant in any way to a person’s standing in the political community.” Id. at 594 (internal quotation marks omitted). The question of endorsement is from the perspective of a hypothetical “reasonable” or “objective” observer. Santa Fe Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 530 U.S. 290, 308 (2000).

Four Justices vigorously dissented in Allegheny, with Justice Kennedy authoring the dissenting opinion. Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 659–70 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part). As discussed below, the dissenting Justices categorically rejected the endorsement concept as an acceptable interpretation of the Establishment Clause, instead insisting that the Establishment Clause must be interpreted in a manner consistent with its historical meaning, a meaning that focuses on coercion, rather than endorsement.

Although courts initially treated the endorsement test as a revision of Lemon’s second prong—the effects prong—it has long since subsumed the other two prongs as well. In 1997, the Court “recast Lemon’s entanglement inquiry as simply one criterion relevant to determining a statute’s effect,” collapsing Lemon’s third prong into merely one aspect of Lemon’s second prong. Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 807–08 (2000) (opinion of Thomas, J.) (discussing Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 232–33 (1997)); accord id. at 845 (O’Connor, J., concurring in the judgment). Then in the case most central to the analysis of the courts below, McCreary County v. ACLU of Kentucky, 545 U.S.

844 (2005), the Court recast Lemon's first prong as an endorsement inquiry. Allegheny itself had initially cast the endorsement test as encompassing purpose as well as effect, articulating the test as "whether the challenged governmental practice has the purpose or effect of 'endorsing' religion." Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 592 (emphasis added). In McCreary, the Court engrafted the endorsement test's rationale from Allegheny into the purpose prong, holding that "[b]y showing a purpose to favor religion, the government sends the . . . message to . . . adherents that they are insiders, favored members [of the political community]." Id. at 860 (internal quotation marks omitted). After supplying the necessary fifth vote to create a majority opinion, Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion articulated this conjoining of Lemon and endorsement explicitly, adding, "The purpose behind the counties' display is relevant because it conveys an unmistakable message of endorsement to the reasonable observer." Id. at 883 (O'Connor, J., concurring).<sup>5</sup> After 2005, government violates the Establishment Clause if (1) it shows a purpose favoring religion, conveying to a reasonable observer an endorsement of religion, (2) its action has the effect of advancing religion because a reasonable observer would believe the government is endorsing religion, or (3) its action excessively entangles government with religion, such that a reasonable observer would conclude the government is endorsing religion.

---

<sup>5</sup> A panel of the Fourth Circuit acknowledged the fusion of these two inquiries. See Lund v. Rowan Cty., 837 F.3d 407, 424 (4th Cir. 2016), aff'd en banc 863 F.3d 268 (4th Cir. 2017).

Endorsement is therefore now the touchstone of all three of Lemon's prongs, including the purpose prong centrally at issue in this case. Some Justices even refer to this test on occasion as the "Lemon/endorsement test." See, e.g., Utah Highway Patrol Ass'n v. Am. Atheists, Inc., 565 U.S. 994, 996 (2011) (Thomas, J., dissenting from the denial of certiorari).

2. However, in some types of Establishment Clause cases the Court does not apply Lemon at all. For example, in Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), the Supreme Court eschewed Lemon when it affirmed the constitutionality of legislative prayers at the outset of lawmaking sessions. See id. at 794–95. And in Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, the Court held that prayers at public school graduation ceremonies are unconstitutional because they coerce minors (though not adults) who are present. Id. at 599.

3. In more recent years, the Supreme Court has looked to history rather than Lemon in Establishment Clause cases. In Van Orden v. Perry, 545 U.S. 677 (2005), the Court upheld a longstanding Ten Commandments display outside the Texas statehouse, with the principal opinion focusing on the place of the Ten Commandments in American history. Id. at 686–90 (opinion of Rehnquist, C.J.).<sup>6</sup> A majority of the Court held that Lemon did not apply in the case, and the plurality cast doubt on the test as a whole. Id. at <sup>6</sup> Justice Breyer supplied the fifth vote setting aside the Lemon/endorsement test to uphold the Ten Commandments, saying that instead of Lemon or the endorsement test, such difficult cases must be decided on the basis of "legal judgment." Van Orden, 545 U.S. at 700 (Breyer, J., concurring in the judgment).

---

686 (“Whatever may be the fate of the Lemon test in the larger scheme of Establishment Clause jurisprudence, we think it is not useful in dealing with the sort of passive monument that Texas has erected on its Capitol grounds.”). The Justices instead looked to history, explaining, “Instead, our analysis is driven both by the nature of the monument and by our Nation’s history.” Id. Thus after Van Orden, there is some class of passive displays that are not subject to the Lemon/endorsement test. At least one circuit followed the Court’s lead, refusing to apply Lemon to a Ten Commandments display. ACLU Neb. Found. v. City of Plattsmouth, 419 F.3d 772, 777–78 & 778 n.8 (8th Cir. 2005) (en banc). At least one circuit has gone even further, extending Van Orden’s displacement of Lemon to other types of establishment cases. See, e.g., Myers v. Loudoun Cty. Pub. Schs., 418 F.3d 395, 402 (4th Cir. 2005) (upholding under Van Orden a statute concerning voluntary recitations of the Pledge of Allegiance in public schools). Another circuit expressed confusion as to whether Allegheny’s endorsement refinement of the Lemon test governs crosses in war memorials, or whether Van Orden instead supplies the rule, and purported to apply both tests. Trunk v. San Diego, 629 F.3d 1099, 1105, 1109, 1117–18 (9th Cir. 2011).

In a subsequent Establishment Clause case, this Court did not even mention Lemon, and instead looked exclusively to history. The Court in 2012 unanimously held that both the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause require a “ministerial exception” to federal employment laws. Hosanna-Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church & School v. EEOC, 565 U.S. 171, 188 (2012). Without dissent, the Court’s analysis examined the history that illuminates the original meaning of the Religion Clauses as recognized by the Framers, never giving the slightest of nods to purpose, effects, or endorsement. See id. at 182–87.

B. Justices of this Court frequently criticize the Lemon/endorsement test.

Members of this Court routinely criticize the Lemon test directly or indirectly, either in its original three-pronged form or in its more recent endorsement variation. On occasion the full Court has highlighted Lemon's shortcomings. See, e.g., Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 679 (1984); Hunt v. McNair, 413 U.S. 734, 741 (1973). It is no secret that the test has been beset by problems from its inception.

Other times the criticism is offered by one or more Justices, often in a more pointed fashion than is typically found in majority opinions. As Justice Scalia said in reaction to the Court's invocation of Lemon in a 1993 case involving a public school:

Like some ghoul in a late-night horror movie that repeatedly sits up in its grave and shuffles abroad, after being repeatedly killed and buried, Lemon stalks our Establishment Clause jurisprudence again, frightening the little children and school attorneys of [the school involved in the litigation]. Its most recent burial, only last Term, was, to be sure, not fully six feet under: Our decision in Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577 (1992), conspicuously avoided the supposed "test" but also declined the invitation to repudiate it. Over the years, however, no fewer than five of the currently sitting Justices have, in their own opinions, personally driven pencils through the creature's heart . . . and a sixth has joined an opinion doing so.

Lamb's Chapel v. Ctr. Moriches Union Free Sch. Dist., 508 U.S. 384, 398 (1993) (citing, inter alia, Lee, 505 U.S. at 644 (Scalia, J., joined by, inter alios, Thomas, J., dissenting); Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 655–57 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part); Corporation of Presiding Bishop of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints v. Amos, 483 U.S. 327, 346–49 (1987) (O'Connor, J., concurring in the judgment); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 107–13 (1985) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); id. at 90–91 (White, J., dissenting)).

As already noted, Chief Justice Rehnquist, joined by Justices Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas, questioned the longevity and vitality of Lemon in 2005. Van Orden, 545 U.S. at 686 (plurality opinion of Rehnquist, C.J.); see also id. at 692 (Scalia, J., concurring) (“I join the opinion of the Chief Justice because I think it accurately reflects our current Establishment Clause jurisprudence—or at least the Establishment Clause jurisprudence we currently apply some of the time.”). Justice Thomas separately weighed in six years later, faulting the Court’s “nebulous Establishment Clause analyses” for creating the result that the Court’s “jurisprudence provides no principled basis by which a lower court could discern whether Lemon/endorsement, or some other test, should apply in Establishment Clause cases.” Utah Highway Patrol Ass’n, 565 U.S. at 995, 996 (Thomas, J., dissenting from the denial of certiorari). Justice Alito added his voice to the chorus in 2012. See Mt. Soledad Mem’l Ass’n v. Trunk, 567

U.S. 944, 945 (2012) (Alito, J., respecting the denial of certiorari) (“This Court’s Establishment Clause jurisprudence is undoubtedly in need of clarity[.]”). And Justice Gorsuch expressed skepticism over the continued applicability of the Lemon test as well, while serving as a circuit judge on a lower court. See Am. Atheists, Inc. v. Duncan, 637 F.3d 1095, 1110 (10th Cir. 2010) (Gorsuch, J., dissenting from the denial of reh’g en banc) (asserting that whether the “reasonable observer/endorsement test remains appropriate for assessing Establishment Clause challenges is far from clear.”). Other judges on the courts of appeals express similar sentiments. See, e.g., Smith v. Jefferson Cty. Bd. of Sch. Comm’rs, 788 F.3d 580, 596–601 (6th Cir. 2015) (Batchelder, J., concurring in part and concurring in the result); ACLU v. Mercer Cty., 432 F.3d 624, 636 (6th Cir. 2005) (commenting that the federal judiciary is confined to “Establishment Clause purgatory”); Glassroth v. Moore, 335 F.3d 1282, 1295 (11th Cir. 2003) (“We follow the tradition in this area by beginning with the almost obligatory observation that the Lemon test is often maligned.”).

C. A broad consensus of scholars spanning the spectrum of legal thought agree that the Lemon/endorsement test is fatally flawed.

Justices’ frequent withering commentary regarding Lemon is mirrored by scathing scholarly criticism of the test. Adherents of two schools of thought regarding the Establishment Clause—strict separationists and accommodationists—view the Clause in very different terms that often lead to diametrically opposed results. Kenneth A. Klukowski, In Whose Name We Pray:

Fixing the Establishment Clause Train Wreck Involving Legislative Prayer, 6 GEO. J.L. & PUB. POL'Y 219, 224–27 (2008). Notwithstanding the fact that they normally disagree with each other, a wide range of professors and academics spanning this divide find common ground in concluding that the Lemon/endorsement framework is as hopelessly subjective as Members of the Court have found it over the test's troubled lifespan. This "Court has managed to unite those who stand at polar opposites on the results that the Court reaches; a strict separationist and a zealous accommodationist are likely to agree that the Supreme Court would not recognize an establishment of religion if it took life and bit the Justices." LEONARD LEVY, THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE: RELIGION AND THE FIRST AMENDMENT 163 (1986).

1. Professor Michael McConnell is a leading accommodationist who concluded after Allegheny that this "Court's conception of the First Amendment more closely resemble[s] freedom from religion . . . than freedom of religion. The animating principle [of the Lemon/endorsement test is] not pluralism and diversity, but maintenance of a scrupulous secularism in all aspects of public life." Michael W. McConnell, Religious Freedom at a Crossroads, 59 U. CHI. L. REV. 115, 116 (1992) (footnote omitted). Rather than achieve consistent results as Justice O'Connor intended, see Wallace, 472 U.S. at 69 (O'Connor, J., concurring in the judgment), "this goal of consistency is the test's greatest failing." McConnell, supra, at 148. That should come as no surprise. "Whether a particular governmental action appears to endorse or disapprove religion depends on the presuppositions of the observer, and there is no ‘neutral’ position, outside the culture, from which to make this assessment.” Id. Consequently, the “concept of ‘endorsement’ therefore provides no guidance to legislatures or lower courts about what is an establishment of religion.” Id.

This jurisprudential quagmire is the product of divorcing the Establishment Clause from its historical moorings. Marginalizing original meaning and historical context from the Establishment Clause has done far more than lead to decisions that the Framers would not recognize; it has led to decisions that this Court would not have recognized as recently as this past century. Professor McConnell contends that “it is like stepping into a time warp to read establishment clause opinions of the 1940’s, 1950’s, and 1960’s.” Michael W. McConnell, Coercion: The Lost Element of Establishment, 27 WM. & MARY L. REV. 933, 933 (1986). Strict-separationist Justices from that era might be mistaken for accommodationists today. “Was it really Justice Brennan . . . who told us that, in deciphering the first amendment, ‘the line we must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers?’” Id. (quoting Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 294 (1963) (Brennan, J., concurring)).

Professor Steven Smith hones in on the Lemon/endorsement test’s ahistorical foundation. “If the possibility of separating church and state presented eighteenth century Americans with a genuine option, the separation of politics and religion, or of government and religion, did not.” Steven D. Smith, Separation and the “Secular”: Reconstructing the Disestablishment Decision, 67 TEX. L. REV. 955, 966 (1989). Religious sentiments were ubiquitous in both public and private thought and conversation, including consideration of public policy. “Religious premises, assumptions, and values provided the general framework within which most Americans thought about and discussed important philosophical, moral, and political issues.” Id. The ineluctable result? “Americans of the time could not seriously contemplate a thoroughly secular political culture from which religious beliefs, motives, purposes, rhetoric, and practices would be filtered out.” Id.

2. Professor Laurence Tribe is one leading strict separationist who sharply criticizes the Lemon/endorsement regime. Four years before the Court narrowly adopted the endorsement test, Tribe opined on Justice O’Connor’s advocacy for the test in her Lynch concurrence that the “Court dispensed at a stroke with what should have been its paramount concern: from whose perspective do we answer the question whether an official crèche effectively tells minority religious groups and non-believers that they are heretics, or at least not similarly worthy of public endorsement?” Laurence H. Tribe, Constitutional Calculus: Equal Justice or Economic Efficiency?, 98 HARV. L. REV. 592, 611 (1985) (footnote omitted).

Professor Steven Gey echoes Professor Tribe’s criticism of the test’s subjectivity. “In contrast to Justice Brennan, whose Schempp standard focuses on the objective facts of government aid to religion, Justice O’Connor converts the analysis of Establishment Clause issues into a question of subjective perceptions.” Steven G. Gey, Religious Coercion and the Establishment Clause, 1994 U. ILL. L. REV. 463, 477. “The obvious problem with any approach that measures constitutional compliance by the appearance of compliance is that every individual perceives the world differently, depending on factors such as the individual’s background, prejudices, sensitivity, and general personality.” Id. at 478–49.

3. Decades of wrestling with the Lemon/endorsement test employed in McCreary, applied by the Fourth Circuit below, and briefed by all the parties to this Court in these consolidated cases, confirm that this test is irredeemable, and cannot be the basis of a principled jurisprudence governing the Establishment Clause. As Professor Choper explained:

[L]ower courts, struggling to give it content, have succeeded only in producing ad hoc fact-laden decisions that are difficult to reconcile. Another unwise feature of the test, more serious because not curable, is its grounding of a constitutional violation on persons’ reactions to their sense that the state is approving of religion. . . . [S]ince its effect is to grant an inappropriately broad discretion to the judiciary, the endorsement approach proves unworkable.

...

Jesse H. Choper, The Endorsement Test: Its Status and Desirability, 18 J.L. & POL. 499, 510 (2002). This judicial and scholarly impeachment of Lemon and its endorsement revision necessarily encompasses the purpose prong.

4. Lemon’s purpose prong is unworkable because it is as subjective as Lemon’s other two prongs. Whenever government acts, its lawyers can probably articulate some sort of secular purpose as part of the government's motivation. But the fact that the government action touches upon religion should likely mean that policymakers were also considering some sort of religious sentiment. How can a judge read the minds of policymakers to draw the line between the two?

Evidently recognizing that secular and religious purposes are likely both present in such circumstances, McCreary made Lemon's purpose prong even more subjective, citing several Lemon decisions to hold specifically that the government must have a primarily secular purpose—that the secular purpose must predominate over any religious purpose. McCreary, 545 U.S. at 864 (collecting cases). The challenge this presents is insoluble. A court cannot examine the thoughts and feelings of individual public officials to determine for which ones the secular motivation was primary, and which was secondary.

The purpose prong of the beleaguered Lemon test is the sole basis for the judgments below in these various cases when holding that the Proclamation violates the Establishment Clause. Yet the statements by Justices, judges, and professors discussed above make clear that the Lemon/endorsement test is not a workable or desirable test. And in fact, this Court recently acknowledged as much in Town of Greece.

D. While the prior Administration urged the Court to decide Town of Greece on Marsh alone, the Court instead responded to Petitioner’s and amici’s urging to opine on Lemon.

The Court did not need to weigh in on the Lemon/endorsement test in Town of Greece, which concerned legislative prayer. Respondents’ initial complaint in the district court declared that the Lemon/endorsement test should control legislative prayer and this Court’s sole examination of legislative prayer, Marsh v. Chambers, 463 U.S. 783 (1983), is an “exception” to general Establishment Clause rules and applies only in the most “narrow and strictly circumscribed” circumstances. Pls.’ Mot. Summ. J. at 8, Galloway v. Town of Greece, 732 F. Supp. 2d 195 (W.D.N.Y. 2010) (No. 08-cv-6088). On appeal, Respondents continued to argue against Marsh and insisted that Lemon’s endorsement variation controlled, an argument the Second Circuit accepted. See Galloway v. Town of Greece, 681 F.3d 20, 30–31 (2d Cir. 2012) (No. 10-3635). But before this Court, Respondents retained new legal counsel who completely reversed course, arguing that Marsh is good law, was fully applicable in that case, and that this Court should invalidate the challenged prayer practice instead as coercive under Lee v. Weisman and Justice Kennedy’s Allegheny dissent. See Resp’t Br. at 20–54, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696). Justice Scalia responded to this abrupt about-face by extracting a stipulation from Respondents during oral argument that they agreed that Marsh controlled this case. See Transcript of Oral Argument at 36–37, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696). This Court could then have decided Town of Greece in a short opinion invoking Marsh, and go no further.

The Solicitor General of the United States in the Obama Administration argued that this Court should do precisely that. The Solicitor General filed an amicus brief in which the United States likewise took the position that Marsh was dispositive of the case at bar, and therefore that the Court should decide the case solely on the basis of Marsh, see Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae at 9–30, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696), and not venture further. When Justice Scalia similarly pressed the Principal Deputy Solicitor General with the same question of whether the coercion test controlled, the Obama Administration explicitly replied in the negative, urging the Court to decide the case on Marsh alone. See Transcript of Oral Argument, supra, at 24.

However, Petitioner Town of Greece argued that the Court should address the broader issue and jettison the endorsement test. The Petitioner argued first that Marsh controlled legislative prayer cases, and that the Court could decide the case by following Marsh exclusively. Petitioner’s Brief at 16–27, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696). But instead of stopping there, Petitioner then devoted the bulk of its brief to lambasting the Lemon/endorsement test, arguing that the Court should abandon it. See id. at 27–50. Numerous amici followed suit, urging the Court to formally repudiate Lemon/endorsement, including almost two dozen sovereign States and almost 100 Members of Congress. See Brief for Indiana Supp. Pet’r, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696);

Brief for Members of Congress Supp. Pet'r, Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. 1811 (No. 12-696).

Ultimately, this Court in Town of Greece chose to “go big.” The Court began by holding that the prayers in Greece were consistent with Marsh. Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. at 1815, 1818. But the Court did not cabin its decision in the manner the Obama Administration urged, which could have left Marsh as a sui generis anomaly in Establishment Clause jurisprudence. To the contrary, Town of Greece proceeded to declare that Marsh did not “carv[e] out an exception’ to the Court’s Establishment Clause jurisprudence,” id. at 1818, and instead showcases the approach that should inform every Establishment Clause analysis, see id. at 1819 (“Marsh must not be understood as permitting a practice that would amount to a constitutional violation if not for its historical foundation. The case teaches instead that the Establishment Clause must be interpreted ‘by reference to historical practices and understandings.’”) (quoting Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 670 (Kennedy, J.)). The Court further held that the historical inquiry that controlled legislative prayer must also be the touchstone of any Establishment Clause analysis. “Any test the Court adopts must acknowledge a practice that was accepted by the Framers and has withstood the critical scrutiny of time and political change.” Town of Greece, 134 S. Ct. at 1819 (emphasis added).

In adopting this test, described infra in Part II, Town of Greece sharply criticized the endorsement test. The Court engaged in a broad rejection of the premises and rationale of the endorsement test, mirroring the criticisms that no fewer than six Justices had leveled against the test—whether called Lemon or endorsement—in the intervening years. Between the majority and plurality parts of his opinion, Justice Kennedy adopted the entirety of his Allegheny dissent as the holding of the Court in Town of Greece.

This repudiation of the Lemon/endorsement test includes the standalone purpose-prong inquiry from McCreary briefed and argued by the parties here. Justice Kennedy joined most of Justice Scalia’s dissent in McCreary, along with all the Justices still serving on the Court who had joined Justice Kennedy in his Allegheny dissent. That part of the McCreary dissent incorporated the same principles as the Allegheny dissent, and embraced the same historical approach to interpreting the Establishment Clause. See McCreary, 545 U.S. at 900–12 (Scalia, J., dissenting). Aspects of McCreary’s inquiry might survive the Supreme Court’s recurrence to history and tradition in Town of Greece, such as an examination of “the text, legislative history, and implementation of the statute, or comparable official act,” such as the Proclamation at issue here. Id. at 862 (majority opinion) (internal quotation marks omitted). But the Court’s holding in McCreary cannot be reconciled with Town of Greece, and thus did not survive the Court’s 2014 seminal decision.

At least two circuits have acknowledged that Town of Greece abrogated Allegheny’s endorsement test. Cressman v. Thompson, 798 F.3d 938, 959 (10th Cir. 2015); Tearpock-Martini v. Borough of Shickshinny, 756 F.3d 232, 238 (3d Cir. 2014). In yet another circuit, Judge Batchelder discussed this doctrinal change at length, Smith, 788 F.3d at 596–605 (Batchelder, J., concurring in part and concurring in the result), referring to Town of Greece as a “major doctrinal shift” in Establishment Clause jurisprudence. Id. at 602.

II. PRESIDENTIAL PROCLAMATION 9645 SATISFIES THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE TEST SET FORTH IN TOWN OF GREECE.

This Court set forth an analysis in Town of Greece, under which the challenged government practice is unconstitutional (1) if it was historically regarded as an establishment of religion, id. at 1819–24, or (2), even if historically accepted, the practice coerces any person to participate in a religion or religious exercise, id. at 1824–28 (opinion of Kennedy, J.).<sup>7</sup> This test is now the current doctrine governing the Establishment Clause for any case where there is not a Supreme Court case still directly on point that dictates a different outcome in the lower courts.<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> Most of the principal opinion in Town of Greece is a majority opinion. However, Part II-B is a three-Justice plurality opinion authored by Justice Kennedy, incorporating all the elements of his dissenting opinion from Allegheny. See Town of Greece, 134 S. C. at 1824–28 (plurality). This plurality opinion is narrower than Justice Thomas’s concurring opinion, in which he and Justice Scalia agreed that coercion is unconstitutional, but would define that concept as “actual legal coercion” such as imprisonment or fines, which were religious establishments under the historical standard, and thus already invalid under Part II-A of the opinion, without the need for Part II-B. Id. at 1837 (Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). Justice Kennedy’s opinion therefore controls in the lower courts. See Marks v. United States, 430 U.S. 188, 193 (1977).

<sup>8</sup> There is also a tie between the historical-inquiry and determining coercion, in that this Court has reasoned that “governmentally established religions and religious persecution go hand in hand.” Engel v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 432–33 (1962).

A. The Proclamation is consistent with the historical meaning of the Establishment Clause.

1. Town of Greece holds that “the Establishment Clause must be interpreted ‘by reference to historical practices and understandings.’” Id. at 1819 (quoting Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 670 (Kennedy, J.)). The Establishment Clause is not violated “where history shows the specific practice is permitted.” Id. The Supreme Court held that “the line [courts] must draw between the permissible and the impermissible is one which accords with history and faithfully reflects the understanding of the Founding Fathers.” Id. (alterations and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court upheld legislative prayer because it is “a benign acknowledgement of religion’s role in society,” id. at 1819, showcasing one of many examples of this principle. Courts must rule permissible under the Establishment Clause “a practice that was accepted by the Framers and has withstood the critical scrutiny of time and political change.” Id. In the context of that case, the Court noted that many people might strongly object to public prayer, especially prayers expressing beliefs the objectors do not share, but reasoned that “[o]ur tradition assumes that adult citizens, firm in their own beliefs, can tolerate and perhaps appreciate a ceremonial prayer delivered by a person of a different faith.” Id.

2. Respondents here have not made any argument or introduced any evidence that would suggest that Presidential Proclamation 9645 runs afoul of the Establishment Clause when examined through the lens of a historical inquiry. Not a shred of their argument explores the application of the Establishment Clause to immigration questions in 1791. Nor do they cite any historical source showing that a positive law that is facially neutral on religion, but that affects adherents of one faith more than adherents of another faith, was an official religious establishment during the Framing. Not only is the Proclamation constitutional under this standard, but the previous policies, Executive Orders 13769 and 13780, were legally permissible, as well.

None of the material the courts below regarded as betraying an impermissible religious purpose under McCreary is impermissible under the historical standard from Town of Greece. The Proclamation satisfies the historical inquiry from Town of Greece.

B. The Proclamation does not coerce persons in the United States to participate in a religious exercise.

1. Even if a government enactment involving faith was not considered an establishment of religion in 1791, Town of Greece also cautioned that the government action not be coercive. “It is an elemental First Amendment principle that government may not coerce its citizens ‘to support or participate in any religion or its exercise.’” Id. at 1825 (plurality opinion of Kennedy, J.) (quoting Allegheny, 492 U.S. at 659 (Kennedy, J.)). For example, when reviewing legislative prayer, these Justices permitted a “fact-sensitive” inquiry to determine whether the government “compelled its citizens to engage in a religious observance,” an inquiry that defines coercion “against the backdrop of historical practice,” id., and thus retains a historical examination as the centerpiece of the entire analysis.

Justice Kennedy added that he thought other factors might suggest coercion, and the examples he gives for legislative prayers are useful here insofar as analogous facts are completely lacking in the instant case, such as “if [municipal] board members directed the public to participate in the prayers.” Id. Justice Kennedy elaborated that public prayers might be coercive “where the prayers [e]ither chastised dissenters [or] attempted lengthy disquisition on religious dogma.” Id. A majority of the Court explicitly rejected the argument that feeling offended or excluded violates the Constitution. It goes without saying that no one wants to be offended. “Offense, however, does not equate to coercion.” Id. “Adults often encounter speech they find disagreeable; and an Establishment Clause violation is not made out any time a person experiences a sense of affront from the expression of contrary religious views. . . .” Id.

2. The President’s Proclamation coerces no one. Neither did Executive Orders 13769 and 13780, for that matter. The policy does not require any immigrant in this country, nor any family member seeking to bring someone into this country, to engage in a religious activity. The President’s Proclamation does not require any verbal affirmation of any religious belief, or any expression of rejecting any belief. It does not command that any person adopt a particular article of faith or adhere to any theological doctrine. It does not require any type of religious attendance, or ceremony, or observance. The Proclamation does not preach conversion to any one faith, or threaten damnation to the adherents of other faiths. It does not disparage or denigrate followers of any faith, nor does it threaten to withhold public benefits from those who will not acquiesce to a preferred governmental religious display or action.

The President's Proclamation of September 27, 2017, is thus consistent with every aspect of Town of Greece. This Court should not now revert to previous tests like Lemon's purpose prong, either in its original form or the endorsement iteration seen in McCreary. The Court should perform a straightforward historical analysis, and conclude that Presidential Proclamation 9645 is consistent with the Establishment Clause.

III. THE PROCLAMATION LIKEWISE SATISFIES THE ESTABLISHMENT CLAUSE UNDER ANY TEST THE COURT COULD APPLY.

A. Agostini requires inferior courts to follow errant precedents that are directly on point until this Court overrules them.

Mere weeks after the Court decided Town of Greece, the Court declined review in another Establishment Clause case, regarding which Justice Scalia and Justice Thomas wrote, "Town of Greece abandoned the antiquated 'endorsement test,' which formed the basis of the decision below." Elmbrook Sch. Dist. v. Doe, 134 S. Ct. 2283, 2284 (2014) (dissenting from the denial of certiorari).

Nonetheless, the Lemon test or its endorsement test revision still applies in the lower courts in some Establishment Clause contexts. "If a precedent of [the Supreme] Court has direct application in a case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the Court of Appeals should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to [the Supreme] Court the prerogative of overruling its own decisions.” Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989), quoted in Agostini, 521 U.S. at 237.<sup>9</sup> If this were a case involving a Ten Commandments display where the record included statements from public leaders responsible for the display similar to those in Kentucky more than a decade ago, then McCreary would control.<sup>10</sup> If this case involved a nativity display in a government building, Allegheny would control. Although the Court’s approach in those cases cannot be reconciled with Town of Greece, the Court has not unequivocally overruled any of those prior cases. Lower courts are bound to follow those previous cases, even while this Court enjoys the option with each such case either to revisit those specific factual settings, or more broadly to formally repudiate the rule.

But Hawaii presents a question of first impression. Never before has an immigration Proclamation been challenged on Establishment Clause grounds. There is no precedent directly on point that implicates Agostini’s admonition. With no such precedent, the general rule declared by Town of Greece controls. That would be true even if this case still resided in an inferior court. There is a fortiori no impediment to following Town of Greece here in the Supreme Court.

---

<sup>9</sup> There is no question that this general principle controls in Establishment Clause challenges, because Agostini was an Establishment Clause case.

<sup>10</sup> Even then, the statements cited by the Court in McCreary were those of government policymakers who made the challenged policy, not those of private citizens running for public office, or aides to policymakers.

This Court can and should adopt a test that looks to history, which will swiftly lead to the inescapable result that the Proclamation is permissible under the Establishment Clause.

B. The Proclamation is also permissible under Larson.

Finally, in previous related litigation that the President's policy violates the Establishment Clause under Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228 (1982), are mistaken. Larson is inapposite. It is true that Larson holds that "one religious denomination cannot be officially preferred over another." Id. at 244. However, Larson then described what this Court meant by "official preference." Larson's bar applies only when the positive law at issue makes "explicit and deliberate distinctions" between religious faiths. Id. at 246 n.23. The Proclamation does precisely the opposite: It is explicitly religion-neutral.

Larson poses no difficulty for the Proclamation. Instead, insofar as facial evaluation is concerned, assuming arguendo that the Establishment Clause can be invoked at all for aliens seeking admission into the United States or any person currently in the country who can raise legal claims regarding the admission of others, all the Constitution requires is "a facially legitimate and bona fide reason" to limit a person's entry. Mandel, 408 U.S. at 770.

All the statements cited by the courts below as the basis for holding that the Proclamation discriminates on the basis of religion were extrinsic evidence consisting of statements by Donald Trump—some made as President, but many as a private citizen—plus statements by presidential aides.

These statements do not constitute evidence of an Establishment Clause violation, and holding such utterances henceforth to be admissible would have a profound chilling effect on the democratic process. Campaigns are messy, and candidates frequently say things during heated contests or at the end of a difficult day that do not find their way into formal policy decisions when the campaign is over and the candidate now carries the solemn obligation of governing. The Republic is best served by candidates whose words are judged solely by the electorate as manifested by Election Day returns at the ballot box. The unelected members of the judiciary must not sit as political censors, parsing campaign statements by private citizens seeking public office as evidence to be cited later as grounds for invalidating official actions.

* * * * *

In conclusion, for all the reasons the Solicitor General sets forth in the President's opening brief, Presidential Proclamation 9645 would pass constitutional muster even if analyzed under McCreary's application of Lemon's purpose prong and the endorsement test. But in reality this is a much easier case, because the controlling precedent here is Town of Greece. Under Town of Greece, there cannot be any doubt that President Trump's Proclamation is consistent with the Establishment Clause.

CONCLUSION

The judgments of the United States Courts of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit should accordingly be reversed.

Respectfully submitted,

KENNETH A. KLUKOWSKI

Counsel of Record

AMERICAN CIVIL RIGHTS UNION

3213 Duke Street #625

Alexandria, Virginia 22314

Telephone (877) 730-2278

kklukowski@theacru.org

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

February 28, 2018