ORAL ARGUMENT REQUESTED

28
29 In Mendoza v. Zirkle Fruit Co., 301 F.3d 1163 (9th Cir. 2002), the Ninth Circuit
30 directed this Court "to determine ... whether ... the Gibbs standard permits the

3 For the reasons that follow, this Court should decline supplemental jurisdiction over
5 Count II.

6 I. FACTS

8 Plaintiffs sued Selective Employment, Inc. (“Selective”), in March, 2000.
10 Selective was named defendant on the basis of an alleged conspiracy to violate the 11
12 Immigration and Nationality Act. See Plaintiffs’ Complaint, Count II, ¶¶ 57-62.
13
14 Plaintiffs’ First Amended Complaint alleges the same claim against Selective.

15
16 Plaintiffs’ only claim against Selective is civil conspiracy, a tort actionable
17
18 under the common law of Washington. See Plaintiffs’ RICO Case Statement, ¶ (b).

19
20 Plaintiffs have acknowledged that this Court’s exercise of jurisdiction over 21
22 their civil conspiracy claim as pleaded against all defendants is a matter of discretion:

23 This Court has subject matter jurisdiction over Count I under the federal 24
25 question doctrine pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 18 U.S.C. § 1964(a).
26
27 This Court may exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Count II
28
29 pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a).

30
31 Plaintiffs’ Complaint, ¶ 11; see also Plaintiff’s Proposed First Amended
32
33 Complaint, ¶ 12 (stating same) (emphasis added).

34
35 If it were the only defendant in this suit, Selective could not be sued by these 36
37 Plaintiffs in federal court because the Court would have neither federal question nor

1 diversity-based jurisdiction over Selective. Thus, Plaintiffs' Motion, as related to
3 Selective, asks this Court both to take jurisdiction over a state law claim over which
5 it has no original jurisdiction and to hale into federal court a defendant that could not
7 be so haled but for Plaintiffs' naming other defendants and pleading another claim.

8 II. ARGUMENT

9 10 A. Standards for Review.

11
12 Analysis of the jurisdictional question here begins with the Gibbs standard.
13
14 The Court in Carnegie-Mellon University v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 348-49, 108 S.Ct.
15
16 614, 98 L.Ed.2d 720 (1988) described the Gibbs standard as follows:

17
18 In Gibbs, the Court ... establish(ed) a new yardstick for deciding whether 19
20 a federal court has jurisdiction over a state-law claim brought in a case
21
22 that also involves a federal question. The Court stated that a federal 23
24 court has jurisdiction over an entire action, including state-law claims,
25
26 whenever the federal-law claims and state-law claims in the case "derive 27
28 from a common nucleus of operative fact" and are "such that [a plaintiff]
29
30 would ordinarily be expected to try them all in one judicial proceeding."

31
32 From Gibbs forward, the exercise of jurisdiction over claims having a 33
34 "common nucleus of operative fact" has been a matter of discretion in the trial court:

35
... Gibbs drew a distinction between the power of a federal court to hear state-law claims and the discretionary exercise of that power. The Gibbs
Court recognized that a federal court's determination of state-law claims could conflict with the principle of comity to the States and with the promotion of justice between the litigating parties. For this reason,

1           Gibbs emphasized that "pendent jurisdiction is a doctrine of discretion,
2 not of plaintiff's right." Under Gibbs, a federal court should consider 3 and weigh in each case, and at every stage of the litigation, the values of 4 judicial economy, convenience, fairness, and comity in order to decide
5 whether to exercise jurisdiction over a case brought in that court
6 involving pendent state-law claims. When the balance of these factors
7 indicates that a case properly belongs in state court, ... the federal court
8 should decline the exercise of jurisdiction by dismissing the case
9 without prejudice.

10           Id., 484 U.S. at 349-50.

11
12           The codification of pendent party jurisdictional principles into 28 U.S.C. § 13 1367 has not changed the fundamentally discretionary nature of this type of 14 jurisdiction:
15
16

17           The supplemental jurisdiction statute codifies (the Gibbs) principles.
18 After establishing that supplemental jurisdiction encompasses "other 19 claims" in the same case or controversy as a claim within the district
20 courts' original jurisdiction, ..., the statute confirms the discretionary 21 nature of supplemental jurisdiction by enumerating circumstances in 22 which district court can refuse its exercise. ... Depending on a host of 23 factors, then – including the circumstances of the particular case, the 24 nature of the state law claims, the character of the governing state law,
25 and the relationship between state and federal claims – district courts
26 may decline to exercise jurisdiction over supplemental state law claims.

27
28           City of Chicago v. International College of Surgeons, 522 U.S. 156, 173,
29 118 S.Ct. 523, 139 L.Ed.2d 525 (1997).

30           Thus, the Ninth Circuit recognizes that a question of supplemental jurisdiction
31
32 still involves considerations of economy, convenience, fairness and comity:

1 ... (W)e emphasize that actually exercising discretion and deciding
2 whether to decline, ... , supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims
3 when any factor in subdivision (c) is implicated is a responsibility that 4 district courts are duty-bound to take seriously. ... While discretion to 5 decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state law claims is 6 triggered by the presence of one of the conditions in § 1367(c), it is 7 informed by the Gibbs values “of economy, convenience, fairness, and 8 comity.”

9 Acri v. Varian Associates, Inc., 114 F.3d 999, 1001 (9th Cir. 1997).

10
11
12 B. This Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over
13 Count II as pleaded against Selective under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(1) and (4).

14
15 28 U.S.C. 1367(c) provides:

16 The district courts may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction
17 over a claim under subsection (a) if –

18
19 (1) the claim raises a novel or complex issue of State law,

20 ...

21 (4) in exceptional circumstances, there are other compelling reasons for 22 declining jurisdiction.

23
24 1) Jurisdiction should be declined pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(1).

25
26 Washington courts have not decided whether the violation of a federal penal 27 statute providing no private civil right of action can support a claim for civil
28 conspiracy. Thus, supplemental jurisdiction should be declined under 28 U.S.C. §
29
30 1367(c)(1).

1 Unlike criminal conspiracy, adjudication of civil conspiracy claim does not
3 depend on the conspiracy, but on damage flowing from conspirators' actions:

5 In a criminal conspiracy, the conspiracy is the gist of the crime and the 6 function of the overt act is to show that the agreeing or conspiring has 7 progressed from the field of thought and talk into action. It completes 8 the offense.

10 In a civil conspiracy, the conspiracy itself is not the cause of action, 11 without overt acts, because again it is the overt act which moves the 12 conspiracy from the area of thought and conversation into action and 13 causes the civil injury and resulting damage. Accordingly, the cases 14 hold that the damage in a civil conspiracy flows from the overt acts and 15 not from the conspiracy.

16 Hoffman v. Halden, 268 F.2d 280, 295 (9th Cir. 1959).

17 Washington follows this principle:

18
19 While an action may lie for damages suffered by reason of torts
20 committed pursuant to a conspiracy, the conspiracy itself, without any 21 actionable wrongs being done thereunder, ordinarily cannot be made the 22 subject of a civil action, and may be of no consequence except as 23 bearing on the rules of evidence, the persons liable, or aggravation.

24
25 W.G. Platts, Inc., v. Platts, 73 Wn.2d 434, 438-39, 438 P.2d 867 (1968)
26 (quoting 15A C.J.S. Conspiracy § 21, at 664 (1967)).

27
28 Here, Plaintiffs plead civil conspiracy on the basis of an alleged agreement to 29 commit violations of the Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA"). The INA,
30 however, provides no private right of action for damages. Lopez v. Arrowhead

3 Packing Co., 482 F.2d 279, 279-80 (5th Cir. 1973) (finding no private right of action
4 under INA provisions setting forth criminal penalties for harboring aliens) and
5 Chavez v. Freshpict Foods, 456 F.2d 890- 893-94 (10th Cir. 1972) (reaching same
6 conclusion).
10

11
12 District Courts regularly decline supplemental jurisdiction when presented with 13 claims involving novel questions of state law. See, e.g., Bowers v. NCAA, 188
14 F.Supp.2d 473, 481 (D.N.J. 2002) (declining supplemental jurisdiction over state law
15 claims involving novel questions of New Jersey law); Winn v. North American 16 Philips Corp., 826 F.Supp. 1424, 1425-26 (S.D.Fla. 1993) (same with Florida law).
17
18
19
20

21 A recurring theme in these decisions is that novel questions of state law should 22 be resolved by the state’s courts. See, e.g., Powers v. CSX Transportation, Inc., 190
23 F.Supp.2d 1284, 1296 (S.D.Ala. 2002) (declining supplemental jurisdiction by stating 24 that novel issues of state law “deserve resolution by an Alabama jurist”); Parkinson
25 v. Anne Arundel Medical Center, Inc., 214 F.Supp. 511, 519-20 (D.Md. 2002)
26 (declining supplemental jurisdiction by stating “novel questions of state tort law ...

1 Trust Co., 844 F.Supp. 258, 260 (E.D.N.C. 1993) (declining supplemental jurisdiction
2 because Plaintiffs' state law claims "present ... unsettled issues of North Carolina law
3 which would be more appropriately resolved by a North Carolina court").

6 In adjudicating Count II, this Court will have to determine whether Washington
7 law allows damages on the basis of an alleged conspiracy to violate the INA although
8 no private right of action exists under the INA. Plaintiffs' civil conspiracy claim
9 presents a novel question of state law that should be resolved by Washington courts,
10 and this Court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Count II.

12
13
14
15
16 2) Jurisdiction should be declined pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(4).

17
18 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(4) permits a Court to decline supplemental jurisdiction on 19 the basis of "other compelling reasons". Several such reasons exist here.

21 First, pendent party jurisdiction may still present Constitutional problems, even 22 after Mendoza. The Mendoza Court did not explicitly overrule Ayala or declare
23 pendent party jurisdiction Constitutional. Nor did Mendoza decide that supplemental 24 jurisdiction over Selective or the state law claim involving Selective was appropriate.
25
26 Further, Mendoza says nothing about Williams v. United States, 405 F.2d 951, 954
27 (9th Cir. 1969) and Hymer v. Chai, 407 F.2d 136, 137-38 (9th Cir. 1969), the cases

1 relied upon by Ayala in determining that pendent party jurisdiction offends the
3 Constitution.

5 Rather, the Mendoza Court found that Ayala was “best read as flagging the
7 necessity for caution due to the potential constitutional problems that might arise with
9 an unduly broad exercise of pendent jurisdiction,” Mendoza, 301 F.3d at 1173, and 10
11 directed this Court to exercise its discretion in deciding the pendent jurisdiction
12
13 question. Thus, it is apparently still the law of this Circuit that the object of pendent
14
15 jurisdiction is “joinder of claims, not joinder of parties”. Hymer, 407 F.2d at 137.

16
17 Selective raises this point to illustrate that exercise of jurisdiction over pendent
18
19 party Selective, whether that jurisdiction is characterized as supplemental or pendent, 20
21 raises a “subtle and complex question with far reaching implications”. Moor v.
22
23 County of Alameda, 411 U.S. 693, 715, 93 S.Ct. 1785, 35 L.Ed.2d 596 (1973).
24
25 Because Mendoza does not clearly answer this question, it is suggested that the lack 26
27 of clarity on this issue be considered as a basis for declining jurisdiction under § 28
29 1367(c)(4).

30
31 Consideration of this basis should occur in light of several other factors. First,
32
33 the issue need not be addressed by this Court because Plaintiffs’ entire case, including 34
35 their RICO claim, can be brought in state court. Because Count II promises

1 continuing jurisdictional issues in this Court, particularly if Plaintiffs' RICO claim
2 is dismissed, see 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3), supplemental jurisdiction should be
3 declined.

6 Next, principles of comity weigh in favor of declining supplemental 7 jurisdiction. District courts have declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction when
8 asked to predict what a state court would do with the question posed by a pendent
9 claim. See, e.g., St. George v. Mak, 842 F.Supp. 625, 632 (D. Conn. 1993)
10 ("abstaining" from the exercise of supplemental jurisdiction over state law claim
11 where District Court's decision would be "at best, a prediction of subsequent state
12 law developments"). Here, adjudication of Count II will require this Court to guess
13 as to whether a conspiracy to violate the INA, if proved, is actionable under 14 Washington law. As a matter of comity, this Court should defer on this issue by 15 declining jurisdiction over Count II.
16
17

18
19 Finally, fairness considerations demand that jurisdiction be declined. Plaintiffs
20 sued Selective in a questionably appropriate forum because Plaintiffs preferred that 21 forum. Selective has spent thousands of dollars defending its right to have Plaintiffs'
22 claims against it litigated in an appropriate forum. As a matter of fairness, Selective
23 should not be subjected to the continuing jurisdictional controversy that prosecution
