1 NOTICE OF MOTION

2 PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that, on January 17, 2016, at 2:00 p.m., before Judge Yvonne 3 Gonzalez Rogers, the Defendants will move this Court for summary judgment.

4 Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, Defendants seek dismissal of the 5 Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint for the reasons set forth in Defendants' accompanying 6 Memorandum of Points and Authorities.

7 MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

8 INTRODUCTION

9 Plaintiff Twitter, Inc. alleges in its Second Amended Complaint (ECF No. 114) ("SAC") 10 that it seeks to publish information contained in a draft "Transparency Report" describing the 11 amount of national security legal process that it received for the period of July 1 to December 31, 12 2013, pursuant to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act ("FISA") and National Security 13 Letter ("NSL") statutes.¹ See SAC ¶ 4. Twitter challenges the Government's determination that 14 certain data contained in the draft report concerning FISA process it received during that period, 15 if any, is properly classified. See id. ¶ 5. Twitter brings three overlapping claims, each of which 16 alleges that restrictions on Twitter's dissemination of information determined by the Government 17 to be classified impermissibly infringe on Twitter's First Amendment rights. See id. ¶¶ 71-96.
18 After granting and denying in part the Government's motion to dismiss the First Amended 19 Complaint, the Court directed the Government to move for summary judgment. See ECF No.
20 134. As set forth below, Twitter's challenges to the Government's classification determination 21 are meritless, and the Government is therefore entitled to summary judgment on all claims.

22 Release of the information in Twitter's draft Transparency Report would harm national 23 security. As explained in the Unclassified Declaration of Michael Steinbach ("Steinbach Decl.", 24 attached as Ex. 1), disclosure of granular aggregate data regarding the Government's use of 25 national security process would harm national security by providing foreign adversaries (such as

26 _____
27 ¹ Defendant's discussion of FISA process that Plaintiff could have received is not 28 intended to confirm or deny that plaintiff has, in fact, received any such national security legal process.

1 terrorist organizations, intelligence services, and investigative targets) with insight into the 2 Government's investigative and intelligence activities, and the evolution of those activities over 3 time.² See Steinbach Decl. ¶¶ 6, 7. The Government has also prepared and made available to the 4 Court, solely for ex parte, in camera review, a classified declaration by EAD Steinbach, which 5 provides additional explanation as to why disclosure of the classified information in the draft 6 report reasonably can be expected to cause serious damage to national security.³ See Notice of 7 Lodging of Classified Decl. of Michael Steinbach for Ex Parte, In Camera Review, ECF No.
8 144. These submissions, “with reasonable specificity, demonstrat[e] a logical connection 9 between the detailed information [at issue] and the reasons for classification.” Shaffer v. DIA, 10 102 F. Supp. 3d 1, 11 (D.D.C. 2015) (citing McGehee v. Casey, 718 F.2d 1137, 1148 (D.C. Cir.
11 1983)). The law is clear that courts should not “second guess” classification determinations by 12 the Executive Branch, and should decline to substitute the speculation of plaintiffs or the Court's 13 own intuition where, as here, the Government has provided a reasonably specific explanation of 14 the logical connection between the information at issue and the reasons for its classification.
15 See, e.g., Shaffer, 102 F. Supp. 3d at 11; Al-Haramain Islamic Found., Inc. v. Bush, 507 F.3d 16 1190, 1203 (9th Cir. 2007).

17 Indeed, the case for deference is particularly strong here, where both Congress and the 18 Executive Branch have reached a judgment regarding the appropriate balance between 19 transparency and national security in disclosures concerning legal process. Specifically, the 20 Director of National Intelligence (“DNI”), recognizing the importance of appropriate 21 transparency with respect to the issuance of national security legal process served on

22 ² Michael Steinbach is the Executive Assistant Director (“EAD”) of the National Security
23 Branch of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (“FBI”). See Steinbach Decl. ¶ 1. EAD Steinbach 24 oversees, inter alia, the national security operations of the FBI's Counterintelligence Division, 25 Counterterrorism Division, and Terrorist Screening Center, and holds original classification 26 authority delegated by the Director of the FBI. Id. ¶¶ 2–3.

27 ³ It is well-established that Courts may rely on classified submissions provided ex parte 28 and in camera to decide whether classification restrictions imposed by the Government on persons subject to non-disclosure obligations comply with the First Amendment. See, e.g., Stillman v. CIA, 319 F.3d 546, 548–49 (D.C. Cir. 2003); In re: Nat'l Sec. Letter, 930 F. Supp. 2d 1064, 1078–79 (N.D. Cal. 2013); In re: Nat'l Sec. Letters, Case Nos. 11-cv-02173-SI, etc., 2016
WL 4501210 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 29, 2016).

1 communication service providers such as Twitter, has declassified the public reporting of certain 2 aggregate data regarding the Government's use of national security process by recipients of such 3 process. The DNI's declassification is coextensive with the "reporting bands" set forth in 4 Section 603 of the USA FREEDOM Act, Pub. L. No. 114-23, 129 Stat. 268 (2015). These 5 authorities reflect the judgment of the two political branches as to how much aggregate data 6 regarding the receipt of national security process may be disclosed "while attempting not to 7 compromise sensitive sources and methods of intelligence operations." Select Comm. On 8 Intelligence, H. R. Rep. No. 113-452, pt. 2, § 701 (2015) ("HPSC/I Rep"). Twitter expends 9 much ink criticizing these bands, but its contention that there would be no harm to national 10 security from disclosure of the more granular classified information in its report is mistaken, 11 particularly in light of the deference owed to the contrary judgment set forth in the EAD's
12 declarations, the DNI's declassification, and the USA FREEDOM Act. As set forth in EAD 13 Steinbach's declarations, disclosure of the information redacted from Twitter's report reasonably 14 could be expected to result in damage to the national security, and that information is therefore 15 properly classified.

16 Because all three Counts of the Complaint challenge the Government's classification 17 determination on First Amendment grounds, see SAC ¶¶ 71-96, and, as Plaintiff acknowledges, 18 it has no First Amendment right to publish classified information, see id. ¶ 73, Plaintiff's claims 19 fail as a matter of law. Plaintiff's peripheral challenge to statutory requirements of the FISA is 20 also meritless. For all of these reasons, as set forth in the instant submission and in EAD 21 Steinbach's declarations, the Defendants respectfully request that the Court grant their motion 22 for summary judgment.

23 BACKGROUND

24 I. Statutory and Regulatory Background

25 The President has charged the FBI with primary authority for conducting 26 counterintelligence and counterterrorism investigations in the United States. See Exec. Order 27 No. 12333 §§ 1.14(a), 3.4(a), 46 Fed. Reg. 59941 (Dec. 4, 1981). Today, the FBI carries out 28 national security operations, including counterintelligence, counterterrorism, and other activities

1 to defeat national security threats directed against the United States through the FBI’s National 2 Security Branch, which is overseen by EAD Steinbach. See Steinbach Decl. ¶ 2.

3 The conduct of national security investigations and the collection, production, and 4 dissemination of intelligence to support counterterrorism, counterintelligence, and other U.S.
5 national security objectives requires the FBI to collect, analyze, and disseminate information.
6 Congress has authorized the FBI to collect such information with a variety of legal tools, 7 including various authorities under the FISA and pursuant to the supervision of the Foreign 8 Intelligence Surveillance Court (“FISC”), an Article III court. See 50 U.S.C. § 1801 et seq.
9 Because the targets of national security investigations and others who seek to harm the United 10 States will take countermeasures to avoid detection, secrecy is often essential to protecting 11 national security while effectively carrying out counterterrorism and counterintelligence 12 investigations. See Snapp v. United States, 444 U.S. 507, 509 n.3 (1980). Recognizing that, 13 Congress has empowered the FISC and the Executive Branch to maintain the confidentiality of 14 national security legal process. See, e.g., 50 U.S.C. §§ 1805(c)(2)(B), 1881a(h)(1)(A). In the 15 USA FREEDOM Act, Congress likewise expressed its judgment regarding the manner in which 16 recipients of national security process may publish information about their receipt of such 17 process, in the aggregate, without imposing an unacceptable risk of harm to the national security.

18 A. FISA

19 Multiple provisions of FISA provide that the FISC may issue orders that “direct” 20 recipients to provide certain information “in a manner that will protect the secrecy of the 21 acquisition.” See, e.g., 50 U.S.C. §§ 1805(c)(2)(B), 1881a(h)(1)(A). For example, Titles I and 22 VII of FISA provide that FISC orders “shall direct,” and FISA directives issued by the Attorney 23 General and DNI after FISC approval of an underlying certification “may direct,” recipients to 24 provide the Government with “all information, facilities, or assistance necessary to accomplish 25 the acquisition in a manner that will protect the secrecy of the acquisition,” without limitation.
26 50 U.S.C. § 1881a(h)(1)(A) (Title VII); see also id. § 1805(c)(2)(B) (similar language for Title 27 I). Additionally, the orders “shall direct” and the directives “may direct” that recipients 28 “maintain under security procedures approved by the Attorney General and the [DNI] any 1 records concerning the acquisition or the aid furnished” that such recipient maintains. 50 U.S.C.

2 § 1881a(h)(1)(B) (Title VII); see also id. § 1805(c)(2)(C) (similar language for Title I).
3 Consistent with the Executive Branch’s authority to control classified information, these 4 provisions explicitly provide for Executive Branch approval of the companies’ procedures for 5 maintaining the secrecy of records associated with FISA-authorized surveillance.

6 Other FISA titles that provide search or surveillance authorities also provide for secrecy 7 obligations to be imposed. See 50 U.S.C. § 1824(c)(2)(B)-(C) (requiring Title III orders to 8 require the recipient to assist in the physical search “in such a manner as will protect its secrecy” 9 and to provide that “any records concerning the search or the aid furnished” that the recipient 10 retains be maintained under appropriate security procedures); 50 U.S.C. § 1842(d)(2)(B) 11 (requiring Title IV orders to direct that recipients “furnish any information, facilities, or technical 12 assistance necessary to accomplish the installation and operation of the pen register or trap and 13 trace device in such a manner as will protect its secrecy,” and that “any records concerning the 14 pen register or trap and trace device or the aid furnished” that the recipient retains shall be 15 maintained under appropriate security procedures); 50 U.S.C. § 1861(d)(1) (providing that “[n]o
16 person shall disclose to any other person that the [FBI] has sought or obtained tangible things 17 pursuant to an order under” Title V of FISA). Accordingly, to the extent that Plaintiff has 18 received any process pursuant to Titles I and VII of FISA, the Title VII directives would contain 19 the statutorily permitted nondisclosure provisions, while the Title I orders would contain 20 nondisclosure requirements that track the statutory provision. Likewise, Title III, IV, or V orders 21 would be accompanied by the statutory requirements described above.

22 B. USA FREEDOM Act

23 Between 2013 and 2015, Congress considered various bills relating to the appropriate 24 level of transparency regarding the Government’s use of national security process. See 25 Steinbach Decl. ¶ 18; e.g., H.R. 3361, 113th Cong. (2014); S. 2685, 113th Cong. (2014). The 26 bills were introduced to address developments affecting the Government’s use of national 27 security process, including the public interest in greater transparency, and the decision of the 28 Second Circuit Court of Appeals in John Doe, Inc. v. Mukasey, 549 F.3d 861 (2d Cir. 2008).

1 These efforts culminated with enactment of the Uniting and Strengthening America By Fulfilling
2 Rights and Ensuring Effective Discipline Over Monitoring Act of 2015 (“USA FREEDOM
3 Act”).

4 In Section 603, codified at 50 U.S.C. § 1874, the USA FREEDOM Act reflects both 5 Congress’s and the Executive’s judgment regarding the manner in which providers may lawfully 6 report aggregate data reflecting their receipt of national security process. This section sets forth 7 two reporting methods that are similar or identical to options previously available to 8 communications providers following the declassification of such aggregate data by the DNI on 9 January 27, 2014. See 50 U.S.C. §§ 1874(a)(1), (a)(3). In addition, Section 603 sets forth two 10 additional methods of reporting on the receipt of national security process, which allow for even 11 more precise numerical reporting of the number of process received over a longer time period.
12 See 50 U.S.C. §§ 1874(a)(2), (a)(4). On July 2, 2015, the DNI, in his discretion and consistent 13 with Section 603, declassified data related to national security process received by providers if 14 publicly reported by means of one of the four options which are set forth in the USA FREEDOM 15 Act. See Steinbach Decl. ¶ 20 (citing ODNI Memorandum for Distribution (ES 2015-00366)).
16 Thus, in accordance with the DNI’s discretionary declassification and as provided in the USA
17 FREEDOM Act, recipients of national security process now may choose to publicly report 18 information about the quantity of national security process they receive in one of four ways. The 19 DNI’s 2015 declassification decision and the four public reporting options enumerated in the 20 USA FREEDOM Act thereby superseded the previous framework for public reporting set forth 21 at the time of the January 27, 2014 DNI declassification determination.

22 II. Factual and Procedural Background

23 On April 1, 2014, Twitter sent a draft proposed Transparency Report to the FBI, seeking 24 advice from the FBI as to which, if any, parts of the proposed report were classified and which 25 could be lawfully published. See Steinbach Decl. ¶ 22. The report contained data reflecting the 26 specific numbers and types of national security legal process that Twitter had received during the 27 preceding six month period, from July 1 through December 31, 2013, in figures much more 28 precise than had been declassified at that time, or have been declassified today. Id.

1 By letter dated September 9, 2014, the FBI General Counsel informed counsel for Twitter 2 that, after careful review of Twitter’s proposed Transparency Report, the FBI had concluded that 3 certain information contained in the report was classified and could not lawfully be publicly 4 released. Id. ¶ 23. The General Counsel specifically identified the information in question, 5 informing Twitter that its proposed report “would disclose specific numbers of orders received, 6 including characterizing the numbers in fractions or percentages, and would break out particular 7 types of process received” in a manner that would disclose classified information. Id. On 8 November 17, 2014, DOJ provided Twitter, through counsel, an unclassified version of Twitter’s 9 draft Transparency Report from which classified information had been redacted. Id. ¶ 24.

10 As the legal framework described above has evolved, so has this action. Plaintiff’s 11 original Complaint, ECF No. 1, focused on the disclosure options available in connection with 12 the January 27, 2014 DNI declassification. The Court held that the claims therein were mooted 13 by the passage of the USA FREEDOM Act. See ECF No. 85. Subsequently, the Court also 14 dismissed Plaintiff’s First Amended Complaint, finding that Plaintiff’s constitutional claims 15 were not viable absent a challenge to the classification of information in the draft Transparency 16 Report. Order, ECF No. 113 at 8. The claims now operative, as set forth in Plaintiff’s Second 17 Amended Complaint, are detailed below.

18 Plaintiff’s Claims in the Second Amended Complaint

19 Plaintiff asserts three duplicative causes of action, see SAC ¶¶ 71–96, based on which it 20 seeks declaratory and injunctive relief to allow it to publish the information from the draft 21 Transparency Report that the Government determined to be properly classified, as well as similar 22 information covering future periods of time, see id., Prayer for Relief.

23 Count I is styled as an implied cause of action under the First Amendment. See id. at 17.
24 Plaintiff acknowledges that there is no First Amendment right to publish the information at issue 25 if it is properly classified, see id. ¶ 73, but alleges, in sum, that because the information redacted 26 from the draft Transparency Report is not properly classified, any prohibition on its disclosure 27 constitutes a unconstitutional prior restraint on its speech, see id. ¶¶ 72, 76, 79–82, 84–86. There 28 are several separate components to Count I.

1 First, Plaintiff alleges that the information redacted from the draft Transparency Report is 2 not properly classified because it does not satisfy the requirements of Executive Order 13526.
3 Id. ¶¶ 73–81. In support, Plaintiff cites media reports that it claims show “[t]he federal 4 government often classifies information that could not be expected to cause damage to U.S.
5 national security,” id. ¶ 77, as well as legislation that the President signed into law in 2010 that 6 was designed to reduce over-classification, id. ¶ 78. Specifically, as to the information at issue 7 here, Plaintiff asserts “on information and belief” that the Government cannot demonstrate that 8 the information at issue “poses a threat to U.S. national security, let alone one that is ‘serious’ or 9 ‘exceptionally grave.’” Id. ¶ 79. Further, Plaintiff argues that, because it seeks to publish 10 information about activity it has conducted “using its own personnel and resources,” the 11 information at issue “is not ‘owned by, produced by or for, or under the control of the United 12 States Government.’” Id. ¶ 80 (quoting Exec. Order 13526 § 1.1). Plaintiff concludes that by 13 “improperly classif[y]ing information and then prevent[ing] its publication,” the Government has 14 violated the First Amendment. Id. ¶ 85.

15 Also as part of Count I, Plaintiff contends that the Court should issue a declaratory 16 judgment that “the standards set forth in Executive Order 13526 constitute the only grounds on 17 which the government may rely to prohibit disclosure of the redacted information in the draft 18 Transparency Report.” Id. It appears that this request is based on Plaintiff’s contention that “[i]f
19 the information that Twitter seeks to publish is not properly classified under Executive Order 20 13526, then the government has no other basis for prohibiting its disclosure.” Id. ¶ 82. Although 21 Plaintiff discusses its contention that FISA and FISC orders do not prohibit disclosure of 22 aggregate data, and its alternative argument that FISA and FISC orders are unconstitutional if 23 they do restrict the publication of such information, id. ¶¶ 83–84, Plaintiff does not otherwise 24 explain the grounds for its position that no other authority could restrict the disclosure of the 25 information at issue. See id. ¶¶ 71–86.

26 Count II is a duplicative First Amendment claim that mirrors the substance of the claim 27 and relief sought in Count I, compare id. ¶¶ 85–86 with id. ¶¶ 90–91, but is asserted through the 28 waiver of sovereign immunity provided under the Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”), see id.

1 at 21. Like Count I, the essence of Count II is Plaintiff’s allegation that the information redacted 2 from the draft Transparency Report is not properly classified, and that Plaintiff therefore has a 3 First Amendment right to publish it. See id. ¶¶ 88–89. In Count II, Plaintiff challenges the 4 “decision to censor Twitter’s transparency report” as a “final agency action” through which it has 5 suffered a legal wrong, because the agency decision not to allow publication “violates the First 6 Amendment.” Id. ¶ 88–89. Count II does not specifically identify the action to which it refers, 7 but the SAC refers elsewhere to the September 9, 2014 letter from FBI General Counsel James 8 A. Baker to counsel for Plaintiff, which advised Plaintiff that “information contained in the 9 report is classified and cannot be publicly released.” ECF No. 1-5 (“FBI Letter”); SAC ¶ 57 10 (describing and quoting the FBI Letter). The SAC also refers to the Government’s production, 11 on November 17, 2014, of a redacted version of the draft Transparency Report, from which the 12 Government redacted classified national security information; see SAC ¶ 61. In any event, this 13 “APA” claim amounts to another version of the same challenge to the Government’s 14 determination that information in the draft Transparency Report is classified, and for which 15 Plaintiff seeks the same relief that it does with Count I: injunctive relief permitting publication 16 of information that is not properly classified and three forms of declaratory relief.⁴ Compare id.
 17 ¶¶ 85–86 with id. ¶¶ 90–91.

18 In Count III, Plaintiff raises another First Amendment claim, again nearly identical in 19 scope, asserting that the Espionage Act is unconstitutional as it would allegedly be applied to it 20 to foreclose publication of the information the Government has determined to be classified.⁵ See 21 id. ¶¶ 92–96. Plaintiff avers that it has a “reasonable concern” that it would face prosecution if it

 23 ⁴ Specifically, Plaintiff seeks: 1) a declaration that Executive Order 13526 is the only 24 basis on which the Government can restrict publication of the information redacted from the draft 25 Transparency Report; 2) a declaration that the FISA nondisclosure provisions do not restrict 26 publication of the information redacted from the draft Transparency Report; and 3) a declaration 27 that the information redacted from the draft Transparency Report was improperly classified, and that Plaintiff therefore has the right to publish such information. Id. ¶ 90. Only the last listed declaration pertains to the decision that Plaintiff seeks to challenge—the Government determination that information is classified, see id. ¶¶ 57, 61, 88.

28 ⁵ The Espionage Act of 1917, 40 Stat. 217, was enacted to protect information related to national defense from being used to the advantage of adversaries. It has been amended numerous times and is currently codified at 18 U.S.C. § 793 et seq.

1 were to disclose the classified information redacted from its draft Transparency Report. Id. ¶ 93.
 2 Arguing that any such prosecution would violate its First Amendment right to speak truthfully 3 about matters of public interest, Plaintiff seeks declaratory and injunctive relief barring any such 4 prosecution. Id. ¶¶ 95–96. In short, all three Counts are First Amendment claims that turn on 5 one issue: whether the Government properly determined that information redacted from the 6 Transparency Report is classified, i.e., that its disclosure reasonably could be expected to harm 7 national security.

8 The Prayer for Relief largely reflects the requests for relief in Plaintiff’s Counts I–III, but 9 also contains a freestanding request that the Court enter a declaratory judgment that “[t]he FISA 10 secrecy provisions are facially unconstitutional under the First Amendment because they do not 11 require nondisclosure orders to contain a defined duration.” See id. Prayer for Relief, (A)(v).
 12 That request is not tethered to Plaintiff’s request to publish its draft Transparency Report, which, 13 as described above, is the focus of all three of the Counts asserted in the SAC. See id. ¶¶ 71–96.

14 LEGAL STANDARD

15 Summary judgment is appropriate where “there is no genuine dispute as to any material 16 fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); see 17 Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247 (1986). Summary judgment is properly 18 regarded “not as a disfavored procedural shortcut, but rather as an integral part of the Federal 19 Rules as a whole, which are designed ‘to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination 20 of every action.’” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 327 (1986) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 1).
 21 In cases where the central dispute is whether information is properly classified, summary
 22 judgment is proper if the Court is able to reach such a determination based upon materials 23 submitted by the Government, including through in camera and ex parte review. See Stillman, 24 517 F. Supp. 2d 32 (D.D.C. 2007) (granting summary judgment upon remand).

25 ARGUMENT

26 I. The Court Should Grant Judgment for Defendants Based on the Detailed 27 Showing that Information in the Transparency Report is Properly Classified.

28 All three Counts of the Complaint rest on Plaintiff’s claim that it has a First Amendment right to publish the information found by the Government to be classified in Twitter’s draft

1 Transparency Report. As this Court recognized, however, “[t]he First Amendment does not 2 permit a person subject to secrecy obligations to disclose classified national security
3 information.” ECF No. 113 at 8 (citing Snepp, 444 U.S. at 509 n.3; Wilson v. CIA, 586 F.3d 171, 4 183 (2d Cir. 2009); and Stillman, 319 F.3d 548–49); see also Berntsen v. CIA, 618 F. Supp. 2d 5 27, 29-30 (D.D.C. 2008). Indeed, Plaintiff acknowledges that it has no First Amendment right to 6 publish properly classified information. SAC ¶ 73.

7 It is therefore undisputed that Plaintiff has no First Amendment right to publish the 8 information redacted from the draft Transparency Report if that information is properly 9 classified. As discussed below, EAD Steinbach, a senior FBI official with extensive experience 10 in FBI national security operations and who exercises original classification authority, has 11 determined that this information meets the standards set forth in Executive Order 13526, 75 Fed.
12 Reg. 707 (Dec. 29, 2009). Section A explains why the Court should grant deference to the 13 judgment of the Executive Branch on this issue, while Section B describes, to the extent possible 14 on the public record, the reasons for EAD Steinbach’s determination.

15 A. The Government’s Classification Decision Warrants the Utmost Deference.

16 “[C]ourts have traditionally shown the utmost deference” to the Executive Branch’s 17 constitutional authority to classify and control access to national security information. Dep’t of 18 Navy v. Egan, 484 U.S. 518, 530 (1988) (quoting United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 710 19 (1974)); Ctr. for Nat’l Sec. Studies v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 331 F.3d 918, 928 (D.C. Cir. 2003) 20 (noting the D.C. Circuit has emphatically “reject[ed] any attempt to artificially limit the long-21 recognized deference to the executive on national security issues) (reviewing cases)). Consistent 22 with that practice, the Ninth Circuit has “acknowledge[d] the need to defer to the Executive on 23 matters of . . . national security,” emphasizing that the Court “surely cannot legitimately find 24 [itself] second guessing the Executive in this arena.” Al-Haramain, 507 F.3d at 1203.

25 In Al-Haramain, the Ninth Circuit (reviewing an assertion of the state secrets privilege)
26 considered the Government’s conclusion that release of information about whether Al-Haramain 27 had been subject to Government surveillance under the “Terrorist Surveillance Program” would 28 damage national security. In particular, the court considered whether the Government could

1 protect a classified document, marked TOP SECRET, that had been inadvertently disclosed by 2 the Government to the plaintiff during an administrative process involving whether the plaintiff 3 should be designated as a global terrorist organization. The Court observed that “at some level, 4 the question whether Al-Haramain has been subject to NSA surveillance may seem, without 5 more, somewhat innocuous.” Id. Underscoring the point, the Court noted Al-Haramain’s 6 argument that “[its] status as a ‘Specially Designated Global Terrorist’ suggest[ed] that the 7 government [was] in fact intercepting [its] communications” under the Terrorist Surveillance 8 Program. Id. However, the Court emphasized that its “judicial intuition about this proposition 9 [was] no substitute for documented risks and threats posed by potential disclosure of national 10 security information.” *Id.*⁶

11 The deference given to the Executive in this sphere makes sense. Because of the 12 President’s constitutional role in national security matters, the Executive Branch is uniquely 13 situated to assess the national security consequences of the disclosure of particular information.
14 Frugone v. CIA, 169 F.3d 772, 775 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (“Mindful that courts have little expertise in 15 either international diplomacy or counterintelligence operations, we are in no position to dismiss 16 the CIA’s facially reasonable concerns.”); Egan, 484 U.S. at 529 (judgments as to harm that 17 would result in the disclosure of certain information “must be made by those with the necessary 18 expertise in protecting classified information”). The Executive Branch, in particular the United 19 States Intelligence Community, has the complete picture of the manner in which particular 20 disclosures may pose a danger to national security. In large part, this is due to the fact that 21 adversaries can combine any individual disclosure with information from other sources to draw 22 conclusions harmful to national security, a process that courts commonly refer to as the “mosaic” 23 theory of intelligence-gathering:

24 It requires little reflection to understand that . . . foreign intelligence gathering in 25 this age of computer technology is more akin to the construction of a mosaic than it is to the management of a cloak and dagger affair. Thousands of bits and pieces

26 ⁶ While Al-Haramain involved an assertion of the state secrets privilege, review of the 27 classification determination at issue here entails the same inquiry—whether information may 28 properly be protected in the interests of national security—and thus the same deference is due.
The Court in Al-Haramain found that the privilege had been appropriately invoked based on the Government’s public and in camera and ex parte submissions. 507 F.3d at 1203–04.

1 of seemingly innocuous information can be analyzed and fitted into place to 2 reveal with startling clarity how the unseen whole must operate “The courts, 3 of course, are ill-equipped to become sufficiently steeped in foreign intelligence 4 matters to serve effectively in the review of secrecy classifications in that area.”

5 Halkin v. Helms, 598 F.2d 1, 8–9 (D.C. Cir. 1978) (quoting United States v. Marchetti, 466 F.2d 6 1309, 1318 (4th Cir. 1972)). The Government’s assessment of potential harm must be given 7 deference because of the expertise and experience of intelligence officials in understanding when 8 and why “each individual piece of intelligence information, much like a piece of jigsaw puzzle, 9 may aid in piecing together other bits of information even when the individual piece is not of 10 obvious importance itself.” Gardels v. CIA, 689 F.2d 1100, 1106 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (quoting 11 Halperin v. CIA, 629 F.2d 144, 150 (D.C. Cir. 1980)).

12 In light of the absence of such necessary experience and “broad view” of foreign 13 intelligence matters, see Marchetti, 466 F.2d at 1318, the judiciary should not second-guess the 14 national security and foreign relations concerns articulated by the Executive Branch. See Al- 15 Haramain, 507 F.3d at 1203 (discussed above); Ctr. for Nat’l Sec. Studies, 331 F.3d at 928 (“It is 16 abundantly clear that the government’s top counterterrorism officials are well-suited to make this 17 predictive judgment. Conversely, the judiciary is in an extremely poor position to second-guess 18 the executive’s judgment in this area of national security.”); McGehee, 718 F.2d at 1149 19 (“[J]udicial review of CIA classification decisions, by reasonable necessity, cannot second-guess 20 CIA judgments on matters in which the judiciary lacks the requisite expertise.”). For these 21 reasons, “it is the responsibility of the [Executive], not that of the judiciary, to weigh the variety 22 of complex and subtle factors in determining whether disclosure of information may lead to an 23 unacceptable risk of compromising the Agency’s intelligence-gathering process.” CIA v. Sims, 24 471 U.S. 159, 180 (1985); see also Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. 1, 34 (2010) 25 (“when it comes to collecting evidence and drawing factual inferences [on national security 26 matters], the lack of competence on the part of the courts is marked, and respect for the 27 Government’s conclusions is appropriate”). This Court should, therefore, accord substantial 28 weight to the Government’s determination concerning the national security harms that could reasonably be expected to result from disclosure of the information redacted from Twitter’s draft Transparency Report.

1 Moreover, the views of the Executive should be afforded even greater weight, where, as 2 here, Congress and the Executive agree on the need and manner for protecting the type of 3 information at issue. Cf. Zivotofsky v. Kerry, 135 S. Ct. 2076, 2083–84 (2015) (quoting 4 Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 635 (1952) (Jackson, J. concurring)) 5 (“when the President acts pursuant to an express or implied authorization of Congress, his 6 authority is at its maximum, for it includes all that he possesses in his own right plus all that 7 Congress can delegate.”). Actions taken by the Executive with specific congressional 8 endorsement, therefore, are “supported by the strongest presumptions and the widest latitude of 9 judicial interpretation, and the burden of persuasion would rest heavily upon any who might 10 attack it.” Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654, 656 (1981) (quoting Youngstown, 343 U.S.
11 at 637) (Jackson, J., concurring). Here, the reporting options available under Section 603 reflect 12 both the judgment of the DNI to declassify aggregate data concerning national security process, 13 if reported in a manner consistent with one of the four formats set forth in the Act, and 14 Congressional judgment regarding the measure of disclosure that can be permitted “while 15 attempting not to compromise sensitive sources and methods of intelligence operations.”
16 HPSC/I Rep. § 701.

17 Plaintiff’s claims seeking to publish even more granular data than that permitted by the 18 bands is therefore contrary not only to the judgment of the Executive Branch, but also the 19 informed policy judgment of Congress. Plaintiff’s speculation that no harm would be wrought 20 by its proposed disclosure, see SAC ¶ 79, cannot outweigh the determinations of both political 21 branches. Indeed, courts have repeatedly, and necessarily, rejected such non-governmental 22 views regarding whether a particular disclosure may harm national security, even when 23 presented by former intelligence officers. See, e.g., Snepp, 444 U.S. at 512 (“When a former 24 agent relies on his own judgment about what information is detrimental, he may reveal 25 information that the CIA – with its broader understanding . . . could have identified as 26 harmful.”); Gardels, 689 F.2d at 1106 & n.5 (former agent’s “own views as to the lack of harm 27 which would follow the disclosure” are insufficient to justify further inquiry beyond the 28

1 Government’s “plausible and reasonable” informed position).⁷ Here, too, the Court should reject 2 Plaintiff’s apparent view that its proposed disclosures would be innocuous; that view cannot 3 overcome the Executive Branch’s judgment and determination that disclosure of the classified
4 information at issue reasonably could be expected to damage national security. See Steinbach 5 Decl. at ¶¶ 29, 39.

6 B. The Information Redacted from the Draft Transparency Report is Properly 7 Classified Pursuant to Executive Order 13526.

8 Pursuant to the President’s constitutional authority to protect and control national security 9 information, see Egan, 484 U.S. at 527 (citing U.S. Const., Art. II, § 2), the President issued 10 Executive Order 13526: Classified National Security Information. This Executive Order requires 11 four conditions for the classification of national security information: (1) the information must be 12 classified by an “original classification authority”; (2) the information must be “owned by, 13 produced by or for, or [be] under the control of” the Government; (3) the information must fall 14 within one of the authorized classification categories listed in section 1.4 of the Executive Order; 15 and (4) the original classification authority must “determine[] that the unauthorized disclosure of 16 the information reasonably could be expected to result in damage to the national security” and 17 must be “able to identify or describe the damage.” Exec. Order 13526, § 1.1. Additionally, 18 Executive Order 13526 contains procedures for “derivative” classification, which occurs when 19 “information that is already classified” is “incorporat[ed], paraphras[ed], restat[ed], or 20 generat[ed] in new form.” Id. § 6.1(o). Persons who “reproduce, extract, or summarize 21 classified information . . . need not possess original classification authority” and are directed to 22 “observe and respect original classification decisions,” including by “carry[ing] forward to any 23 newly created documents the pertinent classification markings.” Id. § 2.1(a), (b). Here, the 24 information at issue meets all four classification requirements, pursuant to established principles 25 governing original and derivative classification.

26 ⁷ See also Halperin v. Nat’l Sec. Council, 452 F. Supp. 47, 51 (D.D.C. 1978) (Even 27 though plaintiff was a self-proclaimed “scholar and actor in the field of foreign policy and 28 national security,” nothing in “plaintiff’s submissions justifie[d] the substitution of this Court’s judgment or the informed judgment of plaintiff for that of the officials constitutionally responsible for the conduct of United States foreign policy as to the proper classification of [documents].”), aff’d, 612 F.2d 586 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

1 1. An Original Classification Authority Has Determined that the 2 Information Is Classified.

3 The information redacted from the draft Transparency Report has been determined to be 4 properly classified by an original classification authority. Executive Order 13526 defines 5 “Original Classification Authority” as “an individual authorized in writing . . . by agency heads 6 or other officials designated by the President, to classify information in the first instance.” Exec.
7 Order 13526, § 6.1(gg). As described above, EAD Steinbach, as the head of the FBI’s National 8 Security Branch, exercises original classification authority delegated by the Director of the FBI.
9 See Steinbach Decl. ¶ 3. In the exercise of that authority, he has determined that the information 10 redacted from the Transparency report is properly classified, satisfying the criteria set forth in 11 Section 1.1(1) of Executive Order 13526. Id. ¶¶ 29, 39.

12 2. The Information “Is Owned By, Produced By or For, or Is Under 13 the Control of” the Government.

14 The information at issue is also “owned by, produced by or for, or is under the control of” 15 the Government, as required under Section 1.1(2). At issue in this case are aggregate numbers 16 concerning national security process the Government has served upon Twitter. In particular, 17 Plaintiff puts at issue the disclosure of information concerning FISA process it has received, if 18 any, or may receive in the future, as well as NSLs issued by the Government. Any FISA orders 19 or directives served upon Twitter, or any NSLs issued to Twitter, were undoubtedly “owned by” 20 and “produced by or for” the Government. Such materials do not lose their secrecy protections 21 when they are served upon third parties. To the contrary, parties who are served with such 22 process are subject to secrecy obligations imposed by the Government, typically in the form of 23 nondisclosure agreements with recipients of such process, see E.O. 13526, § 4.1(2).
24 Furthermore, secrecy obligations may be supported by judicial orders (such as from the FISC) to 25 maintain the secrecy of legal process where the Government determines that is required to 26 protect national security interests. See supra, Background, I.A (describing FISA secrecy 27 authorities); see also, e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 2709(c) (providing for imposition of nondisclosure 28 requirements on NSL recipients). These materials, therefore, do not lose the characteristics of 1 having been owned, produced by, and under control of the Government when the Government 2 seeks to serve legal process on third parties and entrusts those parties with sensitive information.

3 The principles concerning derivative classification underscore this point. Executive 4 Order 13526 recognizes that individuals may “reproduce, extract, or summarize classified 5 information.” In such instances, the material need not be classified by an original classification 6 authority; instead, people who produce such materials are directed to “observe and respect 7 original classification decisions.” E.O. 13526 § 2.1(a), (b). Otherwise, classified materials 8 would lose their protections anytime another person summarized or discussed those materials in 9 some other form. The same principles apply here to Twitter’s summary of any classified 10 materials it has received: where sensitive materials are produced by the Government, served 11 upon a third party, and subject to binding secrecy requirements, the materials do not lose their 12 protected character whenever a third party seeks to summarize those materials in some other 13 form. Aggregate descriptions concerning receipt of national security process thus flow directly 14 from any materials that the Government has created and given to Twitter.⁸

15 3. The Information Falls Within the Classification Categories of 16 Section 1.4 of Executive Order 13526.

17 The information redacted from the draft Transparency Report falls squarely within three 18 of the classification categories under Section 1.4 of Executive Order 13526. As relevant here, 19 that section provides that information shall be considered for classification if it pertains to:
20 intelligence activities (including covert action), intelligence sources or methods, or cryptology, 21 Exec. Order 13526, § 1.4 (c); foreign relations or foreign activities of the United States, id. § 1.4 22 (d); or vulnerabilities or capabilities of systems, installations, infrastructures, projects, plans, or 23 protection services relating to the national security, id. § 1.4 (g).

24 As stated in EAD Steinbach’s Declaration, the disclosure of the information at issue 25 would provide our adversaries a clear picture of the Government’s surveillance activities 26 pertaining to national security investigations, thereby revealing information pertaining to 27 ⁸ To be sure, Twitter also contends that the information at issue here is not properly 28 classified because it has been summarized in such a way as to avoid the risk of any harm to national security. In that regard, Twitter is mistaken for the reasons explained in Section B.4.

1 intelligence sources and methods, and foreign relations or foreign activities of the United States, 2 falling within Section 1.4(c) and 1.4 (d). See Steinbach Decl. ¶¶ 30–38. Such disclosures also 3 would allow adversaries to infer whether or not the Government has acquired a collection 4 capability on particular communication services, thereby revealing information pertaining to 5 “capabilities of systems . . . relating to the national security,” falling within Section 1.4(g). See 6 id. Similarly, because such disclosures could also permit adversaries to identify “safe” platforms 7 on which their communications are not likely to be subject to surveillance, they would also 8 reveal information pertaining to “vulnerabilities . . . of systems . . . relating to the national 9 security.” E.O. 13526 at § 1.4(g); see id. The classified Declaration of EAD Steinbach, 10 submitted to the Court in camera and ex parte, further elaborates on why the information at issue 11 falls within the protections of the Executive Order.

12 4. Disclosure of the Information Reasonably Could Be Expected to 13 Cause Identifiable Harm to National Security.

14 Finally, in satisfaction of Section 1.1(4) of the Executive Order, EAD Steinbach, an 15 original classification authority, “has determined that the unauthorized disclosure of the 16 information reasonably could be expected to result in damage to the national security,” and EAD 17 Steinbach has been “able to identify or describe the damage.” The Supreme Court and Ninth 18 Circuit guidance discussed above, as well as the approach taken by other courts to have 19 considered the Government’s explanations of its classification determinations, see Argument 20 Section I.A, indicate that the Court should review the judgments of EAD Steinbach (and related 21 classification judgments by the DNI) with “utmost deference,” consistent with the expertise and 22 constitutional authority of the Executive in national security matters. And here as well, the 23 judgment of Congress, reflected in the disclosure bands set forth in the USA FREEDOM Act, 24 provides still more reason to give great weight to the Executive’s judgment regarding the level of 25 detail about a company’s receipt of national security process that can be publicly disclosed 26 without incurring an unacceptable risk to national security.

27 Of course, deferential review does not mean that courts have no role to play in the review 28 of a Government decision that information cannot be published because it is classified. See Ctr.
for Nat’l Sec. Studies, 331 F.3d at 932. In such cases, courts focus on whether the Government

1 “in fact had good reason to classify, and therefore censor the materials at issue.” Shaffer, 102 F.
2 Supp. 3d at 11 (citing McGehee, 718 F.2d at 1148). Specifically, courts require that the 3 Government justify its redactions “with reasonable specificity, demonstrating a logical 4 connection between the detailed information and the reasons for classification.” Id. (citing 5 McGehee, 718 F.2d at 1148–49); accord, e.g., Wilson v. CIA, 586 F.3d 171, 185–86 (2d Cir.
6 2009) (same). “The court’s task is not to second-guess the Agency, but simply to ensure that its 7 reasons for classification are rational and plausible ones.” Wilson, 586 F.3d at 185–86.

8 As the Government explained in its Opposition to the Plaintiff’s Motion for an Order 9 Directing Defendants to Initiate an Expedited Security Clearance Process for Plaintiff’s Counsel, 10 see ECF No. 133 at 2–3, 4–6, in analogous cases addressing a challenge by persons subject to 11 nondisclosure obligations pursuant to a Government determination that information cannot be 12 published because it is classified, courts conduct the above inquiry by examining both the 13 materials submitted by the Government in its publicly-available briefing, as well as the 14 Government’s classified explanations, submitted in camera and ex parte. The D.C. Circuit in 15 McGehee “anticipate[d] that in camera review of affidavits, followed if necessary by further 16 judicial inquiry, would be the norm” in such cases,” 718 F.2d at 1149, and, in Stillman, held that 17 the district court had erred when it did not begin its review with that step. See 319 F.3d at 548– 18 49 (remanding to the district court for that court “to determine first whether it [could] resolve the 19 classification [of the information at issue] ex parte”). Since Stillman, courts have followed this 20 guidance. See Shaffer, 102 F. Supp. 3d at 10 (“a district court must first attempt to resolve a 21 classification challenge ex parte”) (citing Stillman, 319 F.3d at 548–49); Boening v. CIA, 579 F.
22 Supp. 2d 166, 174 (D.D.C. 2008); Berntsen, 618 F. Supp. 2d at 28, 30.

23 This line of authority presents the closest analogue to the present situation, and, as this 24 Court noted in its May 2, 2016 Order, these cases “describ[e] [the] procedures for [a] challenge 25 to classification decision[s]” in this setting. ECF No. 113 at 8 (citing Stillman, 319 F.3d at 548– 26 49). Accordingly, the Government has followed those procedures, and submitted the Classified 27 Declaration of EAD Steinbach, solely for in camera and ex parte review, which provides a 28 detailed explanation of the reasons why, in the judgment of the EAD of the FBI, the disclosure of

1 the information at issue here reasonably could be expected to cause serious damage to the 2 national security.

3 To the extent possible consistent with national security, EAD Steinbach’s unclassified
4 declaration discusses those reasons on the public record. See generally Ex. 1. Specifically, EAD
5 Steinbach explains that disclosure of the granular aggregate data in the draft Transparency 6 Report would “allow our adversaries and targets of investigations to piece together a mosaic of 7 information that would provide them significant insight into the U.S. Government’s 8 counterterrorism and counterintelligence efforts and capabilities.” Id. ¶ 30; see also ¶¶ 7–8, 36.
9 Relying on that mosaic, adversaries could “undermine both current and future efforts by the 10 Government to collect foreign intelligence and to detect, obtain information about, or prevent or 11 protect against threats to the national security” by, among other possibilities, taking “operational 12 security measures to conceal their activities, alter[ing] their methods of communication to exploit 13 secure channels of communication, or otherwise counter[ing], thwart[ing], or frustrat[ing] the 14 ability of the Government to pursue them.” Id. ¶ 31. Adversaries thereby could “not only [] 15 ascertain the direction and focus of past national security investigation, but also . . . proactively 16 exploit transparency reporting to detect and thwart current and future surveillance by the 17 Government.” Id. Data released at the level of granular specificity sought by Twitter, moreover, 18 would reveal or tend to reveal highly valuable information about the Government’s national 19 security collection capabilities and investigative interests. Id. ¶¶ 7, 36. And, of course, if 20 Plaintiff were to make such disclosures, other companies likely would publish similar data, and 21 our adversaries could soon obtain a comprehensive picture of the Government’s national security 22 surveillance activity. See id. ¶ 6 n.4, ¶ 32. Importantly, our adversaries actively “gather publicly 23 available information to learn about the capabilities, sources, and methods of U.S. intelligence 24 and law enforcement agencies,” and react to the information they learn by taking 25 countermeasures to limit the effectiveness of U.S. intelligence and law enforcement activities.
26 See Steinbach Decl. ¶¶ 33–35.⁹ These factors demonstrate that the disclosure of the information

27
28 ⁹ Accord In re Mot. for Release of Ct. Records, 526 F. Supp. 2d 484, 494 (F.I.S.C. 2007)
 (“The identification of . . . methods of surveillance would permit adversaries to evade

1 at issue here could significantly harm counterterrorism and counterintelligence efforts, and 2 otherwise could reasonably be expected to cause at least serious damage to the national security.

3 Taken together, EAD Steinbach's unclassified declaration and the more-detailed 4 discussion in his classified declaration demonstrate that the Government "in fact had good reason 5 to classify, and therefore censor," Shaffer, 102 F. Supp. at 11, the information redacted from the 6 Plaintiff's draft Transparency Report. Through these materials, the Government has justified its 7 redactions "with reasonable specificity, demonstrating a logical connection between the 8 [redacted information] and the reasons for classification." Id. Under the authority discussed 9 above, such a showing establishes that the information at issue is properly classified.

10 *****

11 As this Court has recognized, "[t]he First Amendment does not permit a person subject to 12 secrecy obligations to disclose classified national security information." ECF No. 113 at 8 13 (dismissing First Amendment claims because Plaintiff had not challenged the classification of 14 the information that it sought to publish). Now that the Government has established that the 15 information in question is properly classified, that showing is dispositive; Plaintiff has no First 16 Amendment right to publish such information, and summary judgment should be entered for the 17 Government on Counts I–III.¹⁰

18 II. The Legislative and Judicial Branches Also Lawfully May Take Steps to 19 Safeguard National Security Information.

20 As part of Count I and Count II, Plaintiff seeks a declaration under the First Amendment 21 that Executive Order 13526 "constitute[s] the only grounds on which the government may rely to 22 prohibit disclosure of the redacted information in the draft Transparency Report," SAC ¶¶ 85, 90.
 23 Plaintiff also seeks a declaration that FISA does not prohibit the disclosures at issue here, or that, 24 insofar as it does prohibit them, it is unconstitutional. But the Court need not, and should not,

25 surveillance, conceal their activities, and possibly mislead investigators through false 26 information.").

27 ¹⁰Because Twitter acknowledges that it has no First Amendment right to publish properly 28 classified information, see SAC ¶ 73, and the Government has demonstrated that the information at issue is properly classified, no inquiry into whether "the restriction on Twitter's speech is [] narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest," SAC ¶ 84, is necessary.

1 reach these questions; if the Court finds that the information at issue is properly classified, as 2 discussed above, then there is no First Amendment right to publish it. The Ninth Circuit recently 3 reiterated that, as a “‘fundamental rule of judicial restraint,’ [a court] ‘must consider 4 nonconstitutional grounds for decision’ before ‘reaching any constitutional questions.’” In re
5 Ozenne, --- F.3d ---, 2016 WL 6608963, at *4 (9th Cir. Nov. 9, 2016) (quoting Jean v. Nelson, 6 472 U.S. 846, 854 (1985)). Based on the same principle, the D.C. Circuit in Stillman held that 7 the district court had abused its discretion by deciding a First Amendment issue before 8 determining, based on the Government’s ex parte submission, whether the information that the 9 plaintiff sought to publish was classified. 319 F.3d at 547–49. In so holding, the D.C. Circuit 10 highlighted that “[i]f the Government classified the information properly, then Stillman simply 11 [had] no first amendment right to publish it.” Id. at 548. So, too, in this case. See supra 11.

12 In any event, if the Court were to consider Plaintiff’s other arguments, the Court would 13 find that Plaintiff’s attempts to limit the protection for the information at issue are without merit.
14 Plaintiff cites no authority for the proposition that the only manner in which national security 15 information can be protected from disclosure is through Executive Order. To be sure, the 16 protection of classified information by the Executive Branch, which is based on the President’s 17 Article II constitutional authority, is undoubtedly the paramount consideration in deciding 18 whether information should be protected from disclosure. See supra Argument, I.A. But, as 19 discussed below, other authorities may also apply to protect the information redacted from the 20 draft Transparency Report from disclosure, including statutes and court orders.

21 To begin with, Plaintiff’s contention that FISA nondisclosure provisions would not 22 protect aggregate data from disclosure is contrary to the text of the statute as written by 23 Congress. For example, Title I provides that FISC orders, under certain conditions, “shall direct” 24 recipients to assist the Government “in such a manner as will protect [the] secrecy [of the 25 acquisition],” 50 U.S.C. § 1805(c)(2)(B), and “maintain under security procedures approved by 26 the Attorney General and the [DNI] any records concerning [the acquisition] or the aid 27 furnished,” id. § 1805(c)(2)(C). Title VII contains similar provisions that may be included in 28 directives issued thereunder. See 50 U.S.C. § 1881a(h)(1)(A), (B). These provisions are not

1 limited, as Plaintiff contends, to “the contents of specific FISA orders, their targets, and details 2 of ongoing investigations,” SAC ¶ 83. Instead, in them, Congress instructs broadly that the 3 “secrecy of the acquisition” must be protected. The most natural reading of this statutory 4 language is that the fact of the acquisition—the existence of the FISC order or directive—must 5 not be disclosed. Indeed, the orders typically issued by the FISC under Title I pursuant to 6 Section 1805(c)(2)(B) expressly require recipients “not to disclose to the targets or to any other 7 person the existence of the order. . . or the fact of any of the activities authorized [in the order].”
8 Of course, the disclosure that a company has received a certain aggregate number of FISC
9 orders, by the plain meaning of the terms, would disclose “the existence” of the orders. Titles III
10 and IV of FISA, which also contain provisions authorizing FISC orders protecting information 11 from disclosure, likewise speak broadly of protecting the “secrecy” of each acquisition—without 12 limitation—and provide for Government control of the security procedures under which 13 information related to each acquisition is maintained. See 50 U.S.C. § 1824(c)(2)(B), (C) (Title 14 III); 50 U.S.C. § 1842(d)(2)(B) (Title IV).

15 Finally, Title V, the last provision of FISA that might be applicable here, imposes 16 nondisclosure obligations directly on recipients of FISC orders issued thereunder. Title V 17 provides: “No person shall disclose to any other person that the [FBI] has sought or obtained 18 tangible things pursuant to an order under [Title V of FISA].” Once again, protection for 19 aggregate data falls within the meaning of the statutory text. A disclosure that a company 20 received a specific number of orders would “disclose . . . that the [FBI] has sought . . . tangible 21 things pursuant to an order under” Title V of FISA as many times as the number of orders 22 disclosed. And, as with the other four FISA provisions discussed above, the nondisclosure 23 requirement is not limited to “the contents of specific FISA orders, their targets, and details of 24 ongoing investigations,” SAC ¶ 83.¹¹ Whether the specific terms of any order have been violated

25
26 ¹¹ Section 603 of USA FREEDOM Act reinforces that Congress understands aggregate 27 data regarding receipt of national security process to be protected from disclosure. In Section 28 603, Congress introduced the reporting bands that outline the permissible bounds of disclosure by explaining that: “A person subject to a nondisclosure requirement accompanying an order or directive under [FISA] or a national security letter may, with respect to such order, directive, or national security letter, publicly report the following information using one of the following

1 may entail further examination by the Government and issuing court, depending on what 2 information is disclosed. But Plaintiff's contention that no other authority would apply to protect 3 the information at issue is meritless on its face.

4 Furthermore, apart from the statutory protections that shield the data in question from 5 disclosure, nothing prevents an Article III court from reinforcing with a court order other 6 protections against disclosure. Cf. In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 417 F.3d 18, 26 (1st Cir. 2005)
7 ("Absent restriction, courts have inherent power, subject to the Constitution and federal statutes, 8 to impose secrecy orders incident to matters occurring before them"); In re Grand Jury
9 Proceedings, 17 F. Supp. 3d 1033, 1035-36 (S.D. Cal. 2013). Plaintiff cites no contrary 10 authority; indeed, if there were a rule that prevented courts from issuing such orders, the 11 provisions of FISA that authorize FISC nondisclosure orders all would amount to a nullity.
12 Indeed, there is nothing anomalous about the presence of multiple legal nondisclosure 13 requirements overlapping to protect the same sensitive national security information.

14 For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiff's challenges to statutory or judicially-imposed 15 nondisclosure obligations, if any, prohibiting the disclosure of classified aggregate data, fail as a 16 matter of law.¹²

18 structures." Section 603(a). While Section 603(c) clarifies that the Government may, in its 19 discretion, permit other forms of reporting, the quoted language from Section 603(a) reflects that 20 Congress understood other formats of reporting aggregate data as being prohibited unless the 21 Government took such actions.

22 ¹² Unconnected with the three Counts asserted in the Complaint, Plaintiff asks the Court, 23 to find "[t]he FISA secrecy provisions are facially unconstitutional under the First Amendment 24 because they do not require nondisclosure orders to contain a defined duration." See SAC, 25 Prayer for Relief, (A)(v). It is not clear what, precisely, Plaintiff is challenging; if this language 26 relates to the disclosure of aggregate data in the format presented in the draft Transparency 27 Report, then the Court should not reach this constitutional issue because the data is classified as 28 discussed in Section I. If this objection is untethered to the request to disclose aggregate data, then Plaintiff cannot establish that it has standing to raise such a broad challenge; instead, if it has received any process from the FISC (which, if true, would be a classified fact), then Plaintiff must challenge the duration of obligations imposed by the FISC before that court.

But even if Plaintiff could bring this challenge as currently framed, it would be without merit because the Government has long interpreted the FISA nondisclosure obligations as protecting only information that is classified. See, e.g., Notice, In re Mot. for Decl. J. (Jan. 27, 2014), submitted as Exh. 2 to Plaintiff's Compl., ECF No. 1-1 (explaining that because the DNI had declassified aggregate data reported in a manner consistent with the January 27, 2014

1 CONCLUSION

2 The Supreme Court has recognized that “no governmental interest is more compelling 3 than the security of the Nation.” Haig v. Agee, 453 U.S. 280, 307 (1981). The Government has 4 demonstrated, through the Declarations of EAD Steinbach, that disclosure of the information
5 redacted from the draft Transparency Report reasonably could be expected to cause serious 6 damage to the national security, including by providing adversaries with a roadmap of the 7 Government’s surveillance activities and capabilities, and thus is properly classified. See supra 8 18–21. As this Court has recognized, restrictions on the disclosure of classified information by 9 persons subject to secrecy obligations are lawful under the First Amendment. See ECF No. 113
10 at 8. For the foregoing reasons, the Court should grant Defendants’ motion for summary 11 judgment and dismiss the Plaintiff’s Second Amended Complaint.

22 framework, the Government would “therefore treat such disclosures as no longer prohibited 23 under any legal provision that would otherwise prohibit the disclosure of classified data, 24 including data relating to FISA surveillance”). Classification, in turn, as Plaintiff notes in its 25 Complaint, cannot be indefinite. See SAC ¶ 39 (citing Exec. Order No. 13526, § 2.2(f)); see also 26 Exec. Order 13526, § 1.5(d) (“No information may remain classified indefinitely”). Because 27 “[i]t is well established that courts should resolve ambiguities in statutes in a manner that avoids 28 substantial constitutional issues,” Mukasey, 549 F.3d at 872, and equally well-established that time limitations may be read into statutes where that is consistent with the legislative purpose, see id. (citing United States v. Thirty–Seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 368–70 (1971)), Plaintiff is mistaken that the lack of express time limitations in the FISA “secrecy provisions” renders those provisions unconstitutional.
