1 MR. YOO: John Yoo from the Office of Legal 2 Counsel.

3 MR. MARCUS: Jonathan Marcus from the Appellate 4 Section, Criminal Division.

5 MR. GEISE: Jack Geise, Office of Enforcement
6 Operations, Criminal Division.

7 MR. BOWMAN: Spike Bowman, Deputy General Counsel.

8 MR. FELDMAN: James Feldman from the Office of the 9 Solicitor General.

10 MR. DREEBEN: Michael Dreeben, Deputy Solicitor
11 General.

12 JUDGE GUY: Thank you very much. Mr. Olson, are 13 you going to be the lead speaker for this group?

14 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I am, Your Honor. Thank 15 you very much. We have the other people here in this room 16 because there are questions that the Court may have that I 17 may not be able to answer, or areas in which additional 18 details or information concerning the procedures that the

19 Government operates under with respect to FISA may be more 20 fully explained by people who have actually done and been in 21 the process for a period of time. We're happy to proceed 22 under whatever procedure you want but it's certainly fine 23 with us if the members of the Court want to ask us any one of 24 us questions with respect to how this works. We want to make 25 sure that we address every part of it.

1 I have not prepared anything extensive to say at 2 the beginning because I understand the Court is familiar with 3 what the issues are and has spent time with the briefs and 4 the statutes and so forth. I will say this, we're here today
5 because the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court's May 6 17th Order as subsequently incorporated into and implemented
7 in connection with its July 19th, 2002 decision denying a 8 specific FISA application in Case Number 02-662 has 9 perpetuated a serious and increasingly destructive barrier 10 which has hamstrung the President and his subordinates in 11 utilizing the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act to 12 accomplish the vital and central purpose for which it was 13 created; that is to say, the protection of the United States
14 and its citizens from attack and from international 15 terrorism.

16 Unfortunately and sadly, two days from now the 17 entire nation will pause to reflect on how bad things can be 18 if our Government is not prepared with every lawful tool 19 available to protect our country and our people from the 20 immeasurable toll that international terrorism can inflict,

21 and to remember the 3000 lives that were taken from us that 22 day because the resources that we have been given to protect 23 us from such acts either did not work or were not being used 24 effectively.

25 To prevent this sort of thing from happening again,

1 which is why FISA was enacted in the first place, our 2 intelligence agencies and law enforcement personnel, the 3 President's principal agencies in the war against terrorism, 4 must be able to work together efficiently and effectively and 5 cooperatively. Sadly, that is not the condition in which 6 they operate today.

7 And the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court's 8 Order of May 17th is the most formidable, the most 9 inexplicable and the most easily removable obstacle to 10 achieving the goal for effective and efficient gathering of 11 intelligence to protect the people of this country and this 12 country itself from international terrorism.

13 The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act was 14 enacted for the central purpose of protecting against attacks 15 from foreign powers and terrorism. Its central purpose is to 16 enable the President to acquire foreign intelligence
17 information. It defines in the first section of the Act 18 itself foreign intelligence information and the terms of that 19 simple straightforward goal in language which is equally 20 simple, information from foreign agents or agents of foreign 21 powers which is necessary, and I'm speaking now in terms of 22 U.S. persons as opposed to foreign Governments themselves,

23 which is necessary to the ability of the United States to 24 protect against attack, hostile acts, terrorism from agents 25 of foreign powers.

1 The definition of foreign intelligence right there
2 in Section 1801 of the Act is defined in terms of getting 3 information necessary to protect against, and I'll speak in 4 terms of international terrorism, but I mean also those other 5 things that are specified in the Act.

6 The Act does not purport or attempt in any way to 7 constrain the methods by which the Executive will then use 8 that information to protect the citizens of this country and 9 the nation itself. It doesn't categorize different types of 10 uses. It says that FISA may be used to obtain information 11 which may be necessary to protect the people, but it doesn't 12 say or describe or limit the circumstances under which that 13 information will be used by the President or his subordinates 14 to accomplish those statutory objectives which are also 15 fundamental objectives for the President and his subordinates 16 under the Constitution, the protection of this country, its 17 sovereignty, its people from foreign attack, protect its 18 borders and faithfully to execute the laws. Those are all 19 part of the President's central mission.

20 FISA was enacted for the purpose of equipping the 21 President in a lawful way to use lawful means to accomplish 22 those constitutional objectives.

23 There are many many ways in which the information
24 that may be gathered under FISA may be used. The President

25 may use that, and his subordinates, when I refer to the

1 President I'm referring to the President and his subordinates
2 in the Justice Department or in the diplomatic community or 3 in the so-called intelligence community, they're all working 4 for the President to fulfill the President's objectives.

5 The President may use that information in 6 connection with communications with foreign Governments, to 7 elicit cooperation from other countries, to prevent people 8 who may be terrorists from moving place to place. The 9 President may use that information to install greater 10 security, to improve the nation's defenses, to put law 11 enforcement people in places where they may interdict someone 12 about to commit a crime. That information may be used to put 13 more guards in places to make them safer, to erect barriers 14 to protect public buildings, to put people in airports to 15 prevent airplanes from being hijacked. That information may 16 be used to disseminate false or fictitious information to 17 people who would do harm to this country. Misinformation.
18 It may be used to freeze financial resources under the laws 19 of the United States. It may be used to provide alerts at 20 the borders, warnings to the citizens, and it may be used in 21 the law enforcement realm to take potential terrorists or 22 prevent terrorists from actually acting, take them off the 23 streets. That is to say, the law enforcement or prosecution
24 function. But when the information is sought the President 25 doesn't need to decide and shouldn't need to decide how that

1 information will be used. It may be used in one way, in 2 another way or in a multiple or different ways, depending 3 upon the circumstances at the time the President chooses to 4 use it.

5 So the applications that are required under FISA 6 require the President and his subordinates to satisfy the 7 Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court that indeed foreign 8 intelligence is being sought and the manner in which it's 9 being sought fits the description of FISA, but doesn't 10 require and should not require a description of how it's 11 going to be used, or put limitations on how it's going to be 12 used.

13 To use the words of Senator Leahy in connection
14 with the amendment to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance 15 Act, this information, once acquired, should be put to any 16 lawful use necessary by the President to accomplish the 17 objectives of FISA.

18 Now, it is clear and it has been clear from the 19 outset that the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act
20 contemplated law enforcement and criminal prosecution as one 21 of the things that the President might do with respect to the 22 information acquired pursuant to FISA. The very definition 23 of international terrorism in the statute refers to the 24 criminal laws of the United States; as do other provisions in 25 the statute, and the history of FISA, when it was enacted in

1 1978. There are many many references to the possibility of 2 using law enforcement's criminal prosecution function to 3 accomplish the President's objectives.

4 Now, it may well be that in 1978 and indeed today,
5 most of the uses to which this information would be put won't 6 be -- won't involve criminal law enforcement or prosecutors
7 in the process. That's because there are so many different 8 types of information that will be acquired. Much of the 9 foreign intelligence information may have to do with 10 espionage and other activities that don't have anything to do 11 or won't necessarily have anything to do with prosecution in 12 many cases. And I should say before I go on that FISA 13 provides that, before any information may be used with 14 respect to a prosecution, the Attorney General, a precaution 15 must be attached to the information that if it's going to be 16 used by law enforcement officials in a criminal prosecution
17 itself the Attorney General has to approve it.

18 There are many reasons for that. One of which is 19 to make sure that the implementation and operation of the 20 statute is by the highest level of officials of the Executive 21 Branch. That is to say, accountability.

22 Another part of that is centralizing the 23 responsibility so that decisions can be made that make the 24 best possible sense with respect to the goals of the United 25 States and the achievement of those goals. But finally it is

1 also the case that that is a necessary precaution to make 2 sure that if a prosecution is going to be implemented, the 3 Attorney General, hopefully with all of the information at 4 his disposal will decide, yes, it makes sense to prosecute

5 that particular individual.

6 Even if an individual is prosecutable, even if the 7 Attorney General or law enforcement officials or prosecutors 8 may be convinced that a person can be taken off the street as 9 a result of a prosecution and put in jail someplace as a 10 result of a conviction, that may still not be the best answer 11 to the global problem of terrorism. That individual might be 12 turned into an agent of the United States Government. That 13 individual may be surveilled so that he may lead them to 14 other contacts or other agents.

15 So the decision with respect to a prosecution is 16 something that is part of the arsenal, so to speak, but is 17 not one that is always used or invariably used or necessarily 18 used to protect people of the United States from terrorism.
19 But it is one important tool because we know from events that 20 have occurred in the past, that disrupting a cell of 21 terrorists or disrupting a potential conspiracy by taking 22 people off the street, certain people off the street or some 23 people off the street, taking them into custody, may 24 interrupt or interfere with the contemplated act, thus 25 sparing the nation-devastating consequences.

1 Now, what has happened since FISA was enacted as 2 the brief I think describes in detail, is that over the 3 period of time from 1978 up to the present period of time
4 there developed as a result, and it's difficult to say 5 exactly why it happened, I spent some time studying this and 6 there could be a multitude of reasons like there always is in

7 something having to do with Government, there are lots of 8 things that happen, a course of conduct or a way of doing 9 things that is set in motion and it becomes perpetuated, but 10 at some point a dichotomy was developed and I say it's a 11 false dichotomy, between the notion of foreign intelligence 12 and law enforcement purposes. And the reason I spent so much 13 time at the beginning about the purposes of protecting is 14 because that's the purpose for FISA itself, it doesn't -- may 15 include law enforcement and it may include other things; the 16 reason I spent so much time with that is that dichotomy 17 developed that somehow gave birth to the notion that if 18 information is going to be used by law enforcement officials 19 for prosecution purposes, it somehow is not what FISA is all 20 about.

21 Now, there are several things wrong with that, I 22 submit. In the first place it's very difficult for me to 23 describe who is a law enforcement official and who is 24 something else in our Government. Yes, it's true that some 25 people might sit in a room and simply collect information.

1 other people process that information in various different
2 ways and use it. Other people go to Court and use grand 3 juries or the other tools that are available to prosecutors
4 to collect information, to put pieces together. Other people 5 go into Court and actually try cases before Judges in an 6 effort to achieve convictions. But law enforcement is the 7 function of the President to take care that the laws are 8 faithfully executed. That may include gathering information,

9 that may include giving various different instructions, that 10 may include, but is not limited to, prosecution.

11 JUDGE GUY: Isn't it clear that the Justice --

12 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I would like to ask exactly what 13 happened when? Maybe going back to Assistant Attorney 14 General in past administrations, but at what point did this 15 bifurcation, this false dichotomy that you described develop?

16 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, as I said, it's not 17 clear to me exactly, and I think that in the course of 18 history -- there's not a lot of written record or yes, 19 there's a decision here, it seems to me that the case that we 20 cited in the briefs which I have trouble pronouncing, from 21 the Fourth Circuit, Truong, T-R-U-0-N-G, I know there's two 22 other names, it's a 1980 decision of the United States Court
23 of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, adopted that dichotomy
24 with respect to the use, warrantless use, warrantless 25 collection of intelligence information.

1 It's also true, Judge Silberman, that the United 2 States Supreme Court and other Courts both earlier than that 3 and subsequent to that, talk in terms of purposes with 4 respect to the collection and use of information. But it 5 is -- does seem to be that that decision, although it did not 6 involve FISA and it did not involve the application of FISA, 7 used -- because it came after FISA and because it used some 8 of the terms of FISA, became somewhat accepted, yes, within 9 the Judicial Branch but also within the Executive Branch, we 10 obviously acknowledged that, as somehow providing a basis for 11 this dichotomy.

12 Part of the basis for that dichotomy, and it is 13 contained in the Supreme Court's decisions and decisions of 14 other Courts, is that when one is gathering information for 15 the protection of the country one is less concerned, I guess, 16 and one might say this up to a point with the civil 17 libertarian implications of that Act.

18 If there's a high level of threat, that is to say, 19 terrorism or foreign attack, it's one thing for the Courts to 20 accept that that information is being collected so that the 21 President can do lawful things available to him. It's 22 another -- it may be another way that information is used in 23 a courtroom to take someone off the street. And so the 24 Courts are properly sensitive to that.

25 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Which Supreme Court cases are you

1 referring to?

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, we're talking -- 3 I'm talking part of the Supreme Court case that in the sense 4 led to FISA, what we call the Keith case, but also recent 5 Supreme Court decisions involving -- recent Supreme Court 6 decisions involving use of drug-sniffing dogs by the City of 7 Indianapolis, warrantless drug testing of hospital patients 8 in the city of Charlotte in the Ferguson case, and there are 9 several other cases that are antecedent to that in analyzing 10 the use of information, mostly warrantless information, with 11 respect to accomplishing some objectives, and the Court seems 12 to be struggling with but not quite articulating completely,

13 something along the lines of this dichotomy.

14 If it is necessary to keep drunks off the street as 15 opposed to arrest people, the Supreme Court feels more 16 comfortable with it. If it is necessary to prevent students 17 in high schools from engaging in extracurricular activities 18 or athletic activities from injuring themselves or 19 preventing -- presenting a danger to the school community, 20 that may be one thing, but if it's going to be used for 21 prosecutorial purposes, it may be another thing.

22 Now, I submit, however, both in the context of FISA
23 and in the real world it's not a terribly usable dichotomy 24 when we're talking about -- especially when we're talking 25 about the collection of information that may be used and it

1 may be used in a way subject to the approval of the Attorney 2 General and subject to the review of an Article III Court, if 3 it is actually going to be used in connection with a 4 prosecution, a suppression motion and review of, subsequent 5 review by an Article III Court, but it seems clear to me 6 that, and we are talking, if I can say tangentially we are 7 talking in an area in which the Supreme Court recognized in 8 the Steel Seizure case where you have a coalescence of the 9 Executive Branch and the Legislative Branch agreeing that 10 this is authority that the Executive needs, and we're also in 11 an area where the responsibility of the President is at its 12 zenith, that is, to protect our citizens and our country from 13 attack. And as we've seen, devastating attack.

14 So we're talking in an area where the President's 15 responsibility is at its greatest, the damage that can be 16 done if the President is not able to act is at its greatest, 17 and where both the Legislature -- and where under certain 18 circumstances I'm sure the Courts would uphold the action by 19 the Executive without warrant, but here in this situation to 20 add additional level of protection, also, I submit, to 21 regularize the process, to make it both transparent and to 22 involve the judiciary at an early level so that there are 23 certain regular procedures and I think perhaps to help the 24 Executive to say, okay, here's what we're going to do, here's 25 how we're going to carry this off.

1 Now, to continue with my answer to your question,
2 Judge Silberman, yes, the Executive Branch when the FISA
3 Court started implementing that dichotomy by identifying 4 participation by law enforcement officials, and again I use 5 that term very loosely because I'm not sure who that is, in 6 the counter-intelligence section of the FBI, for example, 7 people are both collecting information and acting to utilize 8 it. So we can't make -- there's not -- as you know, there's 9 not these compartments that are recognized, nor should they 10 be recognized, that people are one thing or the other.
11 They're all subordinates of the President acting to fulfill 12 his various constitutional responsibilities which of course 13 include law enforcement, which includes the question of 14 information.

15 JUDGE SILBERMAN: For many years I've had the 16 impression that if a U.S. Attorney or his Assistants were

17 involved in what they thought of as a potential criminal 18 investigation rather than national security --

19 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, and it's quite 20 devastating for the prosecutors who are officers of the 21. United States, who take the oath to defend and protect and 22 honor the laws of the United States, are regularly before 23 Judges who understand probably more than if not much as 24 anybody the limitations, constitutional limitations on the 25 powers of the United States, that those individuals should

1 somehow be thought of as typhoid Marys in connection with the 2 collection of information necessary to protect the United 3 States.

4 JUDGE LEAVY: I understand it was early on that the 5 dichotomy that you speak of having been institutionalized was 6 arrived at. Was that right off the bat?

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I have not been able to 8 assemble all the information necessary to answer that 9 question as well I would like to answer it for you. We 10 can -- in connection with preparation for this argument I 11 tried to collect information about. Going back historically, 12 not all of it is written, if you you'd like we can furnish a 13 supplemental analysis of it. It reached its zenith in July 14 of 1995 when Attorney General Reno formalized that so-called 15 dichotomy and institutionalized in a very severe way the -- 16 this wall, the FISA Court refers to it as a wall between law
17 enforcement and foreign intelligence. And even uses words 18 that suggest that the conduct engaged in by people trying to 19 do this thing for the United States cannot either be actually 20 or even perceived as controlling the acquisition of 21 information by people on the prosecutorial side of the house.

22 Now, this is, it seems to me on its face, 23 unworkable, a recipe for disaster, inconsistent with the 24 purpose of the FISA.

25 JUDGE LEAVY: So I take it then that the Court

1 functioned and the Act was implemented for a number of years
2 before anything was established formally.

3 SOLICITOR-GENERAL OLSON: Yes, that's my 4 understanding.

5 JUDGE LEAVY: For what, almost ten years?

6 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, it would be 17
7 years or so. Of course there is the start-up time for FISA
8 and there are Court decisions that sort of recognize this,
9 but it becomes officially formalized as Department of Justice
10 policy signed by the Attorney General in 1995.

11 JUDGE LEAVY: Now, I want help. I know what you're 12 here for is as an advocate and I appreciate that and I 13 appreciate the brief, but I'm going to share with you some of 14 the concerns I have with the hope that you'll kind of help me 15 out or somebody here will.

16 First of all, it sounds to me as if the Government 17 is talking about issues of purpose, repeatedly, and the 18 effect of the new Act as it deals with the purpose of the 19 application. And that the Court decided this all on the 20 proposition of minimization. And it seems to be a total

21 disconnect between what the Government is talking about by 22 way of what the new Act does and what the Court is talking 23 about by way of need for minimization. And I want to pose a 24 question with respect to minimization that probably is along 25 the lines of what you believe, but I want some assurances

1 that you think it's accurate. Now, I understand from the 2 legislative history that even Congress feels that the 3 substance of this Act is in the definitions.

4 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes.

5 JUDGE LEAVY: Now, I don't know whether that's a 6 fair view of it or not, but these definitions are rather 7 precise and sometimes hard to understand, but, anyway, in 8 minimization procedures under (h) -- under 1801(h), and then 9 one, the first reference is "Specific procedures which shall 10 be adopted by the Attorney General." Now, that almost sounds 11 like it's self-executed, whatever the Attorney General 12 adopts, that's it. By definition. The only thing that 13 tempers that and would make it subject to some sort of review 14 is the use of reasonably designed in light of purpose, the 15 purpose, and techniques, to narrow the accumulation and 16 narrow the storage and narrow the publication or 17 dissemination. Now, what the Court is doing then is saying, 18 as I understand it, that minimization means maintaining these 19 compartments within the departments of Government. Am I, in 20 your view, focused?

21 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I believe that that is 22 correct, that that's what the Foreign Intelligence

23 Surveillance Court was thinking when it issued its May 17th 24 opinion. I can't -- I have not for the life of me been able 25 to extract that from the statute. The provision that you're

1 referring to goes on to say -- we also did another paper
2 actually in preparation of this in case the Court would want 3 that to compare the minimization procedures and other 4 procedures under Title III with the procedures and operation 5 of. I gather the Court would like us to submit that.

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: The Chief Judge.

7 JUDGE GUY: I think that is something we would be 8 very interested in receiving and we may want to talk about it 9 some today also during this proceeding.

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: We will finish this, but 11 I only mentioned that sort of in passing. The minimization
12 procedures in my judgment are designed to assure the Court 13 that the statute requires the Attorney General, in my 14 judgment, to make sure that information is -- once it's 15 collected, is not misused.

16 When you, as you know, intercept communications 17 they may include communications with people who have nothing 18 to do with the purpose of the accomplishment of the statute.
19 It may be -- and the Government and the Courts and the 20 Congress and the Executive for that matter, too have always 21 been concerned about abuse of information, storage of files
22 about people. And that sort of thing.

23 In my judgment the minimization procedures are 24 intended to accomplish that purpose and the Attorney General

25 is to make sure that record retention, record acquisition,

1 record use is not -- does not go beyond the scope of the 2 statute.

3 Now, how the Court got from that point to imposing 4 limitations on communications between Assistants to the 5 President with respect to the implementation of the statute, 6 I don't know. And the most important provision in that 7 (h) (1) to which you were referring is the last clause that 8 says, "Consistent with the need of the United States to 9 obtain, produce and disseminate foreign intelligence 10 information." Thus by which Congress was saying the number 11 one goal is right here, it says it over and over again in the 12 statute, but the acquisition of information necessary to 13 protect the United States and citizens from attack, develop 14 minimization procedures but keep that in mind.

15 JUDGE LEAVY: I take it that it's your view that 16 the Court in its opinion flipped that over and said, in 17 effect, that all of the dissemination -- for example, the 18 dissemination -- well, that the results of surveillance could 19 not be disseminated unless it was consistent with foreign 20 intelligence. And I have a reading of that that says there 21 would be no dissemination of it, that is, to law enforcement
22 if it diminished its value as foreign intelligence. Now, I 23 don't know whether I've put that very clearly or not but the 24 Court focused on this, too.

25 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: The Court did, but I

1 submit that that is not A), in my judgment, a rational 2 reading of the minimization procedures. Once one takes -- as 3 you say, it's all in the definitions and the definition is 4 information necessary to protect. Now, we know now sadly 5 that when you build this wall between the people that have 6 information with respect to this terrorist group and -- the 7 phrase that's become so popular now in discussing the events
8 of September 11th and what went wrong, and I'm not saying 9 that anything here could have changed the situation, but the 10 one guarantee that if you keep the people that you're asking 11 to protect you from those kinds of things and then 12 compartmentalize their functions in such a way that they 13 cannot communicate with one another, the people that are 14 going to implement the procedures by which you're protected, 15 that people over here who might have information about 16 terrorists and people over here who might have information
17 about these same terrorists or connections between or bank 18 accounts that are being used or means by which they get into 19 this country cannot speak to one another, that is a guarantee 20 that you will have one or two hands tied behind your back 21 with respect to accomplishing these things. And the phrase I 22 was about to say that's been used so much in public and in 23 debates about this is connecting the dots. Well, of course 24 it's all connecting the dots because foreign intelligence is 25 zillions of dots out there, pieces of information. If you

1 can
2 connect -- the purpose of this statute and the purpose of the 3 community that we ask to protect us is to put that universe

4 of pieces of information together so that connected pieces 5 make a picture that you can understand and maybe do something 6 with. And we've prevented ourselves from doing that and I 7 don't -- I think I wanted to stay with your question is that 8 I don't think that there is anything implicit in any way in 9 the statute, including minimization procedures, that would 10 suggest that those minimization procedures are intended to 11 accomplish this.

12 One of the bases upon which I rely, I think I rely 13 on the statute itself and its history and all of these other 14 things and the common sense meaning of these words for that 15 conclusion but also paragraph three of (h) speaks in terms of 16 procedures, again minimization procedures that allow for the 17 retention and dissemination of information that is evidence 18 of a crime which has been or is about to be committed and 19 that is to be retained and disseminated for law enforcement 20 purposes.

21 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Do you think that refers to 22 non-foreign intelligence crimes?

23 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, and the 1978 House 24 report which we've cited -- may I ask for the number of the 25 report? 1283, House Report 1283, and I'm referring to page

1 62.

2 JUDGE LEAVY: Now, that's on which Act?

3 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That's FISA itself.

4 JUDGE LEAVY: The original.

6 JUDGE LEAVY: Okay.

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That refers to (h) (3) and 8 why (h) (3) is in there. And there's a paragraph in the 9 middle of the page of that report which I've marked up for my 10 own purposes -- it's page 62. It's actually cited on page 11 ten in a footnote, I think it's page ten of the FISA Court 12 opinion itself as somehow supportive. It's either page ten 13 or footnote ten in the FISA Court opinion itself. So I went 14 to that provision to see what possible support the reference 15 to that provision and that portion of the legislative history
16 could have to what the Court was doing. And it seems to me, 17 if anything, it illustrates the position that we're taking 18 about here. That, Judge Silberman, makes it clear that to 19 the extent a FISA-approved surveillance uncovers information 20 that's totally unrelated -- let's say, that a person who is 21 under surveillance has also engaged in some illegal conduct, 22 cheating --

23 JUDGE LEAVY: Income tax.

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Income tax. What we keep 25 going back to is practically all of this information might in

1 some ways relate to the planning of a terrorist act or 2 facilitation of it.

3 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Try rape. That's unlikely to 4 have a foreign intelligence component.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: It's unlikely, but you 6 could go to that individual and say we've got this

7 information and we're prosecuting and you might be able to 8 help us. I don't want to foreclose that.

9 JUDGE SILBERMAN: It's a stretch.

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: It is a stretch but it's 11 not impossible either. And again, that's what we believe 12 that provision is all about and allows that information to be 13 retained again and turned over to law enforcement officials 14 so that law enforcement officials might prosecute that 15 individual. But in the course of explaining that, the House 16 Report right in the middle says -- and you have to put this 17 in context, I'll read this sentence, it says, "Similarly," 18 referring to information that is not in that category that 19 Judge Silberman just described, "Much information concerning 20 international terrorism would likewise constitute evidence of 21 crimes and also be foreign intelligence information'." So 22 the legislature, the House Report here is acknowledging and 23 recognizing and specifically articulating that information 24 that is evidence of crimes relating to terrorism is foreign 25 intelligence information. That is consistent -- I was going

1 to mention a point, I was going to go back to that Fourth
2 Circuit case but I didn't want to interrupt.

3 JUDGE LEAVY: Go ahead.

4 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Judge Bell, then Attorney
5 General Bell, testified in connection with that Truong case,
6 and he said that, and it's cited in the Court opinion itself 7 and I'm paraphrasing it somewhat, but it's on page 47 of our 8 brief and note five of 629 F2d at page 916. It says, "Nearly

9 every one of these counter-intelligence investigations that I 10 have seen involves crime in an incidental way. You never 11 know when you might turn up something you might want to 12 prosecute." And so -- that's all consistent with the 13 legislative history and the definition of the statutes.
14 People who are planning to commit terrorism or attacks on 15 this country are almost invariably going to involve 16 themselves in the commission of some crime or another. They 17 may enter the country illegally. They may acquire resources 18 illegally. They may carry too much currency for a foreign 19 national.

20 JUDGE LEAVY: Well, I think that argument is 21 fortified also by the provision that in the event that an 22 emergency surveillance is authorized by the Attorney General, 23 if a crime is determined and it can be reported to law
24 enforcement, it can only be homicide or a threat -- a threat
25 to safety, so there is a restriction on the dissemination

1 under that section that I don't see in the one with respect
2 to dissemination of information acquired by Court Order.

3 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I haven't focused on 4 that.

6 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I agree.

7 JUDGE GUY: Not to change the topic we're 8 discussing but to approach it from a slightly different 9 angle, right at the beginning of your presentation you 10 mentioned that you were here today in effect appealing from a

11 denial of an application and you devote some time in your 12 brief to that and those present on the FISA Court might say 13 that you didn't get a denial of your application, you got a 14 modification of it.

15 Speaking only for myself to the degree that that 16 raises a jurisdictional issue, I'm comfortable with the fact 17 that you're properly here before us today as a result of that 18 modification, however it is described. But the question that 19 I'm leading up to is that for years, 20-some years after the 20 FISA Court was established the Government operated with that 21 Court without ever the necessity of an appeal. This is, as I 22 said at the outset, our first appeal. So along comes the 23 Patriot Act which clearly and I think beyond peradventure 24 expands Government's powers, not contracts it. And here we 25 have the first appeal. So there's kind of a touch of irony

1 in that and that leads to my first question. The FISA Court 2 in effect modified your, if you will, generic procedures for 3 minimization. That was one approach. What Judge Baker could 4 have done in this particular application without the Court
5 doing that as a unit is simply saying I will only approve 6 this application if in this particular case you modify your 7 minimization procedures accordingly.

8 So I guess my first question is do you challenge
9 the right of the FISA Court to do anything with minimization
10 procedures since nobody knows until the investigation
11 proceeds exactly what you're going to run into. In other 12 words, is it within the jurisdiction of the FISA Court to 13 even lay down the perimeters of minimization.

14 It strikes me it's a little bit like Brady material
15 in a criminal case. The Court doesn't tell the Government 16 what they have to do but if the Government doesn't do what 17 they have to do, they proceed at their peril. And that 18 traditionally in Title III applications was the way it was.
19 We always assumed -- as a District Judge I assumed that the 20 Government knew its minimization responsibilities and it was 21 at their risk if they didn't proceed in accordance with them.
22 It seems to me we have a fundamental question, should FISA be 23 saying anything prospectively before minimization?

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I thought about 25 that and I think that the right answer is most of what you've

1 said, but I think I have to concede, and I will think about 2 this some more, but to the extent that FISA itself in 1805 --
3 this is the issuance of the Order, 1805(a), necessary
4 findings, the Court, it seems to me, does have to make a -- 5 part of (a)(4) of 1805, that the minimization procedures have 6 to be part of the application, and then the Court has to find 7 that the proposed minimization procedures might alter the 8 definition of 1801.

9 So it seems to me that the Court can say, well, the 10 minimization procedures that you've set forth in your 11 application are not sufficient under the definition. But 12 having said that, when one looks at the definition and 13 especially that last clause of the definition, and refers to 14 consistent with the goals of obtaining foreign intelligence

15 which I say then incorporates the need to protect the United 16 States, that there's got to be a great deal of deference to 17 the Attorney General's decision with respect to what must be 18 kept, maintained and so forth with respect to these 19 minimization procedures. But at minimum the Court went 20 vastly beyond that in imposing limitations on how the -- it 21 isn't just Judge Leavy, it isn't just what they do with the 22 information, it's how they can collect the information, 23 because the provision says in the order which was engrafted
24 and I think had to be engrafted by Judge Baker in a 25 subsequent application, because that's what the court sitting

1 en banc decided was a minimum requirement when it rejected
2 what the Attorney General said it was going to do, said any 3 communication, any suggestions, recommendations I think is 4 the word of the order, with respect to the initiation, 5 expansion, implementation or whatever, of a FISA application
6 by a prosecutor is ipso facto controlled and ipso facto 7 prohibited.

8 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Excuse me. Perhaps I
9 misunderstood, but I took that to be exactly Judge Guy's 10 point. The minimization procedures deal with what you do 11 with the information as you get it. And maybe it's case 12 specific rather than how you develop it in the first place.
13 That's what I thought you were getting at.

14 JUDGE GUY: Absolutely.

15 JUDGE SILBERMAN: You're quite right under 1805
16 that the FISA Court has authority to approve it but you're, I

17 think, answering yes to his question, it doesn't focus on how 18 you develop the information, rather what you do with the 19 information.

20 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, it does say in 21 (h) (1), procedures designed -- adopted by the Attorney
22 General reasonably designed in light of the purpose blah blah 23 blah, to minimize the acquisition and retention, and so 24 forth. So it's there, but -- so that's why I sort of wanted 25 to give a 95 percent yes to that question but then they took

1 it just totally to a different level.

2 JUDGE GUY: But do you view -- isn't it partially 3 your position that the FISA Court by, in effect, packaging
4 its opinion in terms of minimization was indirectly
5 reinserting the primary purpose standard back into the whole 6 process?

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Exactly. And they said
8 so. On page -- the opinion -- I'll pull this out. on page 9
22 of the FISA Court's opinion, the second full paragraph.
10 The Court said, "Given our experience in FISA surveillance 11 and search, we find that those provisions," the Attorney 12 General's revised procedures which were then before the 13 Court, "Sections (2) (b) and (3), particularly those which 14 authorized criminal prosecutors to advise FBI intelligence 15 officials on the initiation, operation, continuation or 16 expansion of FISA-intrusive seizures are designed to enhance 17 the acquisition, retention, dissemination for law enforcement 18 purposes instead of being consistent with the ability of the 19 United States to obtain, produce, and so forth, foreign 20 intelligence information." So the Court actually said that 21 that's what it was doing and basically said we liked what the 22 Attorney General did in 1995. Not only do we like it, we're 23 going to insist that this Attorney General follow those 24 procedures even if this Attorney General finds that they 25 don't make sense, even if the statute has been amended to

1 make it as Judge -- Chief Judge Guy said, more easy for the 2 Executive to accomplish his responsibilities. And even for 3 Congress in adopting 1806(k) specifically said that the 4 intelligence-gathering people consult with and coordinate 5 with law enforcement, and that such coordination would not 6 undermine the certification by the people preparing these 7 FISA applications, that it was for foreign intelligence 8 purposes, nor shall it prevent the granting of the order.

9 What the Court did here on May 17th and then in the 10 subsequent rejection of the FISA application was ignore, read 11 1806(k) out of existence and just override all of these other 12 things. Now, this process he -- we got to this point in 13 history because of the false start after the Truong case in 14 19 --

15 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Let me stop you for a moment on 16 the Truong case because you're absolutely right, that is the 17 touchstone of the bifurcation that you described and it was 18 as you correctly pointed out, a case which interestingly 19 enough came up after FISA but dealt with facts before FISA.
20 So it was not a FISA interpretation and the Court therefore

21 doesn't deal with the question of seeking foreign 22 intelligence information but deals instead with the notion of 23 foreign intelligence reasons. It doesn't use the term at 24 all. It has a premise which I wonder whether you are 25 prepared to disagree with, the premise is that the Executive

1 should be excused from securing a warrant in such a situation
2 only when the surveillance is conducted primarily for foreign 3 intelligence. It goes on to explain why and that is,
4 "Because once surveillance becomes primarily a criminal 5 investigation, the Courts are entirely competent to make the 6 usual probable cause determination and because, importantly,
7 individual privacy interests come to the fore and Government 8 foreign policy concerns recede when the Government is 9 primarily attempting to form the basis for a criminal 10 prosecution." That's the premise.

11 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And I shouldn't disagree 12 more and, in fact, what we've been talking about in terms of 13 the definition by Congress of foreign intelligence 14 information is inconsistent with that. It's also 15 inconsistent with the ability of the Executive to use one of 16 the -- however infrequently used in the foreign intelligence 17 context -- one of the most potent and effective mechanisms, 18 that is to say, and law enforcement can mean more than 19 prosecution.

20 JUDGE SILBERMAN: But remember, Truong is a 21 constitutional case.

22 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And it's a warrantless.

23 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Yes. Do you think of FISA as 24 warrantless or not?

25 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: No, I don't think of FISA

1 as warrantless but I just simply mention that the Court there 2 was talking about warrantless searches.

3 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Well, insofar as the Justice
4 Department sort of slid in over the years into this 5 bifurcation, is not part of the reason constitutional 6 concern?

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I think that concerns
8 about the constitutionality of the Government's behavior are, 9 let's say, part of the atmosphere under which these issues
10 are being considered. I would say that on the other side, 11 and I'll come back to, if I can, to part of your question, is 12 that we have very significant constitutional concerns when an 13 Article III Court or FISA Court tells the President that it 14 must have a unit within the Executive Branch through which 15 all communications between people working for the President
16 must operate. That they can't talk to one another. That you 17 have to schedule meetings.

18 One of the things that I also did, Judge Silberman, 19 is look at a memorandum by the Assistant Attorney General for 20 the Criminal Division a few months ago attempting to 21 implement this wall and providing instructions as to how 22 every communication must go through the office of 23 Intelligence Policy and Review before people can talk to one 24 another. And it is madness. It is like that chart that they

25 made when it was being proposed that the health care system

1 be revamped, where all you have to do is look at it and 2 realize that can't work.

3 With respect to the part of your question about the 4 competence of the judiciary to make these decisions, yes, I
5 understand and I respect --

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'm not raising the question of 7 whether the FISA Court exceeded Article III limitations by 8 seeking to administer the Justice Department, which is a 9 separate question itself which I may very well come back to, 10 but I'm now focusing on the primary purpose test in Truong.
11 That is a constitutional opinion, you're quite correct, it's 12 pre-FISA. We have to explore today how much FISA deviates 13 from the classic warrantless crime. It certainly deviates in 14 the particularity aspects and how significant that is 15 constitutionally.

16 Incidentally, although your brief is very useful it 17 doesn't have an awful lot focusing on the constitutionality 18 of the amendment to the statute which adopted the significant 19 purpose test.

20 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, in part I 21 understand that's true. And we'll be happy to address in 22 greater detail any aspect of that that the Court is 23 interested in, but the reason --

24 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Don't we have to decide that 25 incidentally?

1 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: The FISA Court
2 specifically articulated that it wasn't concerned with the 3 constitutional question. It doesn't get into the 4 constitutional question. It didn't address the 5 constitutional question. It didn't think it needed to. I
6 don't think that that issue is before the Court at this 7 point, but --

8 JUDGE SILBERMAN- Wait a minute. Stop for a 9 second. Remember this is a strange situation where we don't 10 have an adversary. If we thought the District Court, the 11 FISA Court, was in error, even posing through the guise of -- 12 excuse me, guise is the wrong word, through the procedure 13 of -- minimization procedures, the primary purpose test, and 14 if we thought the primary purpose test was not consistent 15 certainly with the Patriot Act, wouldn't it be necessary for 16 us to consider the question whether the Patriot Act 17 amendments were constitutional?

18 Senator Leahy when he proposed this explained to 19 the Senate that the Courts were going to have to decide 20 whether the significant purpose test is constitutional.

21 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I understand that if I 22 were on that side of the table I would feel that it would be 23 appropriate to consider the constitutionality of what I was 24 being asked to do. I don't think that it's a close case at 25 all. Because of the reasons that have been articulated by

1 the Supreme Court, for example, in the Keith case.

2 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Keith has a footnote saying -- 3 incidentally, you should know that the Chief Judge actually 4 tried the Keith case as an Assistant U.S. Attorney.

5 JUDGE GUY: Justice came in and took care of it,
6 for better or worse.

7 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Then lost it.

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That sometimes happens.
9 But there is a body of law that we're prepared to deal with 10 in greater detail if it will assist the Court with respect to 11 the issues that I was addressing before, that the paramount
12 interest of the Executive in this area because of the degree 13 of the threat, because of the nature of foreign in -- the 14 foreign power, the foreign -- the powers of foreign powers, 15 their ability to work in secret, their ability to frustrate 16 normal law enforcement mechanisms, the responsibility of the 17 President to the people, and all of those categories of 18 reasons which might well justify warrantless activity in this 19 area but which when combined with Congressional endorsement 20 of these procedures, and I would say that --.

21 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Is it your view the Government's 22 motivation in constitutional terms, not statutory, but in 23 constitutional terms the Government's motivation, the degree 24 of interest in the Government seeking criminal prosecution is 25 wholly irrelevant in constitutional terms?

1 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I hate -- whenever 2 I'm faced with that kind of a question, wholly irrelevant, I
3 hate to say so because I don't know how we can conceive --

4 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Excuse me, Mr. Olson, your brief
5 actually says that motivation is irrelevant.

6 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And I believe that that 7 is the case. Whether one could come up with a conceivable
8 concept in which someone is out to get someone, or something 9 like that, I don't know but I believe that with respect to 10 FISA the motivation needs to be to collect information to 11 protect the public and to protect the Republic. That's what 12 the definition of foreign intelligence is.

13 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'm talking constitutional.

14 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I understand that and I 15 agree with what is said in the brief and I can't conceive of 16 a situation in which, especially in this context --

17 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Suppose you had a case of a 18 fireman going into a house and finding drugs. As I 19 understand it, there's nothing to prevent the fireman from 20 telling the police about the drugs even though the fireman 21 didn't have a search warrant, assuming the fireman is 22 proceeding under typical firefighter's modus operandi. But 23 if the firefighter's motivation was to find the drugs, that 24 would be unconstitutional, wouldn't it?

25 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: It may well be. What

1 we're talking about and what Senator Leahy to whom you
2 referred, specifically said in addressing this issue or part 3 of this issue, and this is on page 41 of our brief, and this 4 is the position that we take here, is that the protection 5 against these foreign-based threats by any lawful means is

6 within the scope of the definition of foreign intelligence 7 information and the use of FISA to gather evidence for the 8 enforcement of these laws was contemplated by FISA.

9 JUDGE SILBERMAN: You're responding to my 10 constitutional questions by coming up with very good answers
11 from FISA, but I'm raising the question whether I'm inclined 12 to think it's necessary for us to address the constitutional 13 arguments. It surely can be argued that the Congressional 14 adoption of or even the original statute or its adoption of 15 significant was unconstitutional. And I for one would like a 16 brief on the constitutionality question. I don't see any way 17 to avoid grappling with that issue.

18 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: We have no problem
19 whatsoever in providing that brief. We would want a few days 20 to put it together but I think it's entirely legitimate and 21 of course it's legitimate and it's something that we'd be 22 happy to address. We think that, and I think to answer here, 23 that to the extent that a motivation for the gathering of 24 information is -- to the Executive, the Attorney General, is 25 contemplated for the use of this information is properly

1 acquired under the provision of the statute to prosecute that 2 person and therefore take that terrorist off the street
3 because he entered the country illegally, or let's say 4 individual rather than terrorist, is using funds illegally or 5 using the funds to blow up a building, to the extent that the 6 Attorney General ultimately decides I want to use that 7 information for that purpose because that's the most

8 effective way and the most effective legitimate way to 9 protect the public, then having that motive early on isn't a 10 prohibitive motive and can't be a prohibitive motive and 11 shouldn't be a prohibitive motive.

12 JUDGE SILBERMAN.- I understand your argument. I
13 would like to see it developed in terms of Supreme Court
14 cases on the Fourth Amendment question.

15 JUDGE GUY: Certainly we would welcome a brief on 16 that. I would say this, however, that, and I would ask 17 anyone present to disabuse me of this notion if I'm wrong on 18 it, before the Keith case and after the Keith case the power
19 of the Executive to use procedures outside the Fourth 20 Amendment for the development of information involving 21 foreign intelligence was never thought to implicate the 22 Constitution. And that after the Keith case which sort of 23 brought to light, to public light, some of the things that 24 law enforcement was doing, in my view FISA was passed not as 25 an implementation of the executive powers but as a

1 restriction on the executive powers. And as a result of that 2 it sort of makes the issue a little different because nobody 3 ever maintained, that I know of, never successfully
4 maintained, or there's a Court decision that challenged
5 successfully the President's right, for example, to do this 6 kind of warrantless activity in terms of true foreign 7 intelligence. And the concern that the FISA Court I think is 8 wrestling with is to keep FISA from swallowing Title III.
9 That's the concern. And in that regard, and Mr. Kris is

10 here, in the transcript of the hearing, near the end Judge 11 Baker in the colloquy of Mr. Kris says, "But in brief and in 12 summary, you do by these minimization procedures seek to 13 allow the criminal division to direct, expand and initiate 14 FISA procedures, FISA operations, right?" And Mr. Kris 15 responds, "The answer is yes." And although I wasn't present 16 to see the expression on Judge Baker's face my hunch is that 17 he thought that that was the smoking gun in terms of your 18 answer.

19 Now my question is if the Attorney General sought 20 to have as his chief implementer of FISA matters as far as 21 proceeding to go before the FISA Court and whatnot the 22 Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal 23 Division, would that violate anything?

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, may I answer that 25 and then Mr. Kris may want to expand on what he was thinking

1 when he gave that answer, but my answer is that if the 2 Attorney General decides that the Assistant Attorney General
3 for the Criminal Division or the Deputy Attorney General or 4 the General Counsel for the Federal Bureau of Investigation 5 is the best one to coordinate all of these activities, to 6 collect this information and determine the best way to use
7 it, that is constitutional. And that the Courts, with all 8 due respect, don't have the power or authority or expertise 9 or constitutional legitimacy in making such decisions. And 10 to the extent -- I don't think, I do not think that any 11 decision at the application stage is going to necessarily 12 result in a prosecution, even if there is someone that we, 13 the Government, knows has done something, and we'd like to 14 have, the Government would like to have the information 15 necessary to implement a prosecution.

16 At the end of the day the Attorney General, himself 17 or herself, is going to have to approve that, and it may make 18 sense at the time that particular trigger is pulled or not, 19 but to the extent that that information and to the extent
20 that we're talking about Title III, FISA itself says, 21 specifically says notwithstanding any other provision of law.
22 FISA was intended not to replace Title III but to provide the 23 Executive with authority, aside from and in addition to Title 24 III. Yes, it may have been to restrict but it was also meant 25 to authorize.

1 To the extent that Congress was imposing procedural 2 constraints and a process which Congress at the time thought 3 was beneficial, yes, there may have been -- there certainly 4 are certain restrictions that if they -- but it doesn't mean
5 that the Executive can't proceed, as you suggest, in a 6 warrantless capacity entirely consistent with the Fourth
7 Amendment if the exigencies exist to justify that. And it
8 doesn't mean that an individual who is suggesting a 9 particular FISA application may be in his or her mind
10 paramount at the time we've got someone that we can prosecute 11 and desperately need to do that to stop these terrible events
12 from happening I don't think constitutionally undermines 13 FISA, the application or the implementation of the statute.

14 JUDGE GUY: Doesn't the statement by Judge Baker -- 15 it at least suggests to me that's a conflating of origin with 16 purpose. You don't determine purpose by origin.

17 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: No, I agree with you, and 18 that is what is the problem fundamentally with the FISA 19 Court's decision, that that -- there's two things. One, the 20 purpose, the FISA Court felt if the purpose has to do with 21 law enforcement it's a bad purpose or possibly potentially 22 impermissible purpose. And then the next step is that 23 anybody who has a hat that says prosecutor, plays on the 24 prosecutors' softball team, is a bad person because that 25 means that that person will have a bad objective. And that

1 is why this wall, and the Court frankly talks about this wall 2 as such an insidious thing because prosecutors often make 3 decisions not to prosecute, prosecutors working with 4 intelligence people may say, fine, we don't need to prosecute 5 this person.

6 But the one way to frustrate the effect is 7 illustrated in this very application that was before Judge
8 Baker, there are two efforts going on here. One was a 9 prosecutorial effort, one was an intelligence-gathering 10 effort, and somehow the Executive finds himself in the 11 position that you have to pursue one and abandon the other, 12 or pursue the other and abandon the other one when the two 13 should work together.

14 And the reason why we submitted last week the Los 15 Alamos report, and I hope we got it to you, is that these 16 pages of that report illustrate how this process broke down.

17 It is a disaster, I submit, that these people attending -- 18 intending to accomplish an objective of protecting our lives
19 as required under the Constitution and the statute can't talk 20 to one another, and this communication setup that we have is 21 utterly dysfunctional.

22 JUDGE SILBERMAN: 1804 says it requires the 23 identity of the federal officer making the application. And 24 that that person -- and also the approval of the Attorney 25 General. At what level is the identity of the federal

1 officer making that application, how high is that?

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I'd like Mr. Kris and Mr.
3 Baker to help me answer that.

4 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'll tell you the reason I ask 5 this question, it follows on Judge Guy's question, because if 6 anybody's purpose is relevant it's the Attorney General, I 7 would think. And I'm really troubled by the notion of the 8 Court reaching down into the bowels of the Justice Department 9 to determine who initiated what. But I was curious who is 10 the -- at what level does the Attorney General assist?

11 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: May I?

12 MR. KRIS: A FISA application that would go to the 13 FISC would have an application document that would be signed 14 by one of Jim Baker's lawyers from OIPR and it would have a 15 declaration, an affidavit of facts signed by a supervisory 16 special agent from FBI headquarters. It would have a 17 certification under 1804(a)(7) in the case of electronic

18 surveillance signed by typically the Director of the FBI but 19 there are other officials designated to do so, and then a 20 written approval and a signature from the Attorney General, 21 the acting Attorney General or the Deputy.

22 JUDGE SILBERMAN: It can be the Deputy.

23 MR. KRIS: It can, yes.

24 JUDGE SILBERMAN: So whose purpose is involved?

25 When the Court -- the Court must determine whether the

1 purpose of a surveillance is dependent upon foreign 2 intelligence information.

3 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: It must accept the 4 certification that is provided with it unless it is clearly 5 erroneous.

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Yes, but my point in asking the 7 question, whose purpose is relevant? Is it the line 8 attorney? Is it the Deputy Attorney General? Is it the 9 Attorney General, the FBI Director?

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: The Attorney General 11 ultimately is certifying that the application and the 12 components of the application are correct and meet the 13 definitions of the statute. I would submit to you that under 14 the statute it is therefore the Attorney General's ultimate 15 authority, but of course from a constitutional standpoint the 16 Attorney General is working under the auspices of the 17 President of the United States.

18 JUDGE LEAVY: The application has to be made by a 19 federal officer. A postal inspector conceivably. It says,

20 "Application for Court Order: A. Each application under 21 this shall be made by a federal officer in writing under 22 oath." Okay? Then the Attorney General, as I read it under 23 1804-2 has to certify that it conforms to the Act. He's the 24 lawyer that says this thing conforms to this Act. This thing 25 is lawful under this Act. Then under (a) (7) you have to have

1 another certification by an Assistant to the President for 2 national security affairs or some other executive officer who 3 is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.
4 And that's where purpose comes in. We don't even have to 5 talk about purpose until we get to this guy. And he's the 6 one who tells us what the purpose is. If I understand it 7 correctly. And the Attorney General has nothing to do with 8 the decision on what the purpose is. It's the administrator.
9 And in this case I take it it's the Director of the FBI.
10 Now, it might be more healthy if that were another executive 11 officer. Do you follow me?

12 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I'm not sure that I 13 do but -- so let me ask you to 14 JUDGE LEAVY: All right. Let's just walk through 15 the application.

16 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I understand what you 17 said with respect to the identity of the persons in this 18 package that goes to the Court.

19 JUDGE LEAVY: Yes, but nothing do I see with 20 respect to the certification of the Attorney General.

21 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Actually to make your point, the 22 Section Two, (a) (2) calls for the approval of the Attorney

23 General to make the application. (7) calls for a 24 certification. And then (7) (A) and (E) refer to the -- well, 25 it's not clear whether (B) does, I guess. (E) is a little

1 ambiguous. But (A) says the certifying official deems the 2 information sought to be foreign intelligence information and 3 the certifying official, as Judge Levy suggested, is in 4 Section Seven.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Right.

6 JUDGE LEAVY: And that's the one that was amended
7 by the Patriot Act.

8 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Yes, by adding (b).

9 SOLICITOR GENERAL-OLSON: A significant, yes.

10 JUDGE SILBERMAN. So his question is, and I think 11 it's a good question, is it the certifying official, the 12 Assistant to the President for national security affairs, or 13 a person designed by the President? And my impression is 14 that it's the FBI Director. So is it the FBI Director who 15 certifies that the information sought is foreign intelligence 16 information and a significant purpose is to obtain foreign 17 intelligence?

18 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That's my understanding.
19 And I've seen that signed by the Director of Central 20 Intelligence as opposed to the Director of the FBI, but I 21 also understand and I will be corrected, I am sure, by my 22 colleagues, as I understand it, the last person to look at 23 this package who signs the approval, the Attorney General

24 reads everything in that package and asks questions about any 25 part of it because the Attorney General is taking

1 responsibility for that application and everything in it.

2 JUDGE LEAVY. But he would have to have a
3 certification of purpose from somebody else?

4 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, he would have to.
5 Which as I read the statute the FISA Court, the FISC, then 6 must accept unless it's clearly erroneous.

7 JUDGE LEAVY: Oh, yes, I follow that. I'm just 8 talking about the mechanism. We're talking about who can 9 apply. You tell me why a postal inspector couldn't apply.

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I'm not saying a postal 11 inspector couldn't apply provided --

12 JUDGE LEAVY. He can get the Attorney General to 13 say this conforms to the law and he can get somebody to say 14 this has to do with national security, and he's home free.

15 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON; I understand. And from a 16 constitutional standpoint it would not make sense for a Court 17 to say it has to be this official or that official.

18 JUDGE LEAVY: Now, if you were writing on whole 19 cloth you would simply repeal all the Attorney General's 20 Order on this subject and just say we will tell you on each 21 application as required that we have these minimization 22 procedures, would you not?

23 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, probably that's a 24 good suggestion. However, I wouldn't foreclose the Attorney 25 General giving guidance to his subordinates with respect to

1 how regularly these things are handled, assembled and so
2 forth. There is value from the standpoint of the Attorney
3 General of --

4 JUDGE LEAVY. For internal purposes.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: For internal purposes of 6 making sure that this I is dotted and this T is crossed and 7 it presents itself in a certain format.

8 Now, these applications -- again, I have limited 9 experience, but my experience has been frequently if they're 10 describing a particular so-called presumed-to-be terrorist 11 organization or a nation or there are reapplications for -- 12 or an application for an extension which contain some of the 13 same language about some of the same organizations, but to 14 regularize the process, and that's I think at least some of 15 the Attorney General guidance, at least this Attorney 16 General's guidance is intended to do.

17 The 1995 -- I agree with you, that if I were 18 writing --

19 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Well, may I go back to past 20 history. For one, your brief argues the original FISA 21 statutes never adopted the bifurcation between primary 22 purpose and a criminal law purpose. However, it is fair to 23 say, is it not, that the first time the Justice Department 24 presents that argument it is before this Court. It never was 25 presented before.

1 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That's correct.

2 JUDGE SILBERMAN: And indeed the Justice Department
3 went along with the bifurcation for many years. Not only 4 went along but endorsed it in the letter to Congress asking 5 for modifications of the FISA statute and the Patriot Act.

6 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: It endorsed it as a 7 reality that the Department was dealing with. Whatever the 8 words that were used, Judge Silberman. And I'm here to say 9 that we do not -- we do believe today and after having 10 studied this as intensely as I could possibly have done, I 11 believe that it is correct that that bifurcation based upon 12 purpose is inconsistent with FISA and it was accepted as a 13 matter of accommodation by the Justice Department over the 14 years.

15 JUDGE SILBERMAN: You said flatly to the Congress
16 and your Assistant Attorney General said, "On the other hand, 17 it's also clear that while FISA states the purpose of a 18 search is for foreign surveillance, that need not be the only 19 purpose. Rather, law enforcement considerations can be taken 20 into account, so long as the surveillance also has a 21 legitimate foreign intelligence purpose."

22 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I would have used
23 different words to describe that for the reasons I described 24 here, but I think what has to be understood in the context of 25 this situation that the Justice Department was facing an

1 emergency and made an effort in a short period of time to 2 obtain the best possible relief --

3 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I don't mean to be critical. All

4 I mean to do is try to make sense out of the present
5 legislation. Judge Guy is absolutely correct, that the 6 Patriot Act was designed to loosen restraints, but one of the 7 restraints which the Justice Department told Congress it was 8 suffering was the primary purpose test which it told Congress 9 came out of FISA.

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Which it had been told in 11 turn by the FISA Court that that's where it came from, and 12 that was a reality that it was dealing with.

13 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Well, that's true. Now I'm 14 trying to figure out what it means when Congress adds the 15 phrase in (B) that a significant purpose of the surveillance 16 is obtain foreign intelligence information. Doesn't that 17 necessarily mean -- and indeed that goes to the second 18 argument, the alternative argument in your brief, does that 19 mean that a primary purpose can be criminal prosecution? If 20 you accept the bifurcation.

21 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I only accept it in the 22 context that those words are used in the context of the 23 reality that had evolved as a result of the 1995 Attorney 24 General decisions, decisions of the --

25 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'm just trying to figure out

1 what is that significant purpose.

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And I believe if you take 3 a significant purpose and the two principal changes to the 4 extent that they're before us today are that change and 5 1.806 (k).

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Coordination.

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, coordination and 8 consultation. If you take those together against the 9 framework of the awful reality that the Department and the 10 President was faced with as explained in the Los Alamos 11 report and in the General Accounting Office report that we 12 also submitted to this Court is that the Department was 13 attempting to be free from the shackles of having to quantify 14 what it was motivated by or who was interested in what 15 information provided, that the information -- that a 16 significant purpose was foreign intelligence as defined by 17 the statute. That it wouldn't have to say that that was 80
18 percent of the reasons or 60 percent of the reasons or 49
19 percent of the reasons and two percent this and five percent
20 this. It was intended to make it easier for the Justice 21 Department if it said not a primary purpose but a purpose.

22 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Isn't it clear as well though 23 that Congress had to mean that the other purpose would be 24 criminal when it said that if a significant purpose of 25 surveillance is to obtain foreign intelligence information,

1 it had to mean that the other purpose would be criminal.

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I don't accept that 3 because I don't accept the notion that -- well, you see, the 4 problem with that, Judge Silberman, that I have, and I 5 understand we're not dealing with perfect clarity here and 6 we're dealing with legislation that was passed without the 7 full panoply of hearings and reports and so on and so forth,

8 and we're dealing with legislation that was designed to deal 9 with the crisis that had become stark as a result of 9-11 and 10 because of these reports, so it isn't perfect, but the idea 11 that a criminal prosecution -- that law enforcement and 12 prosecution are the same thing, I can't bring myself to 13 accept.

14 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Certainly because you studied the 15 FISA statute, and it seems to me that's a perfectly 16 legitimate reading, but unfortunately that was not the 17 reading of the Justice Department and that's not what they 18 told Congress. And what interpretation would you have us 19 give to the language of (7) (B) now?

20 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I would insist that 21 (7) (B) simply means that a certification by the appropriate 22 officials at the Department, that the acquisition of foreign 23 intelligence as a significant motivation for what was being 24 sought here is enough and that the Department need not negate 25 law enforcement prosecution or any of the other reasons that

1 the Government may have to seek this information.

2 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Suppose the FISA Court had before 3 it a case in which the application makes clear that the only 4 methodology that the Justice Department contemplates is 5 criminal prosecution, they wish to get this target and 6 criminally prosecute him, not to prevent something happening 7 in the future because of something he or she did in the past.
8 And they are adamant on that. Would the FISA Court be 9 authorized to say since the only purpose suggested or 10 indicated in the documents before us is criminal prosecution, 11 under (B), (7) (B), we deny it?

12 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I think that that 13 would be still a legitimate application because we cannot go 14 away from the definition in the statute. I don't believe 15 that there is enough history of significance that changed a 16 significant purpose to repeal the central definition in the 17 statute as enacted in 1978.

18 JUDGE SILBERMAN: You would have us give no meaning 19 to (B), it means nothing?

20 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: No, I do believe that it 21 does, provided that the certification by the appropriate 22 officials which can only be reviewed on a clearly erroneous 23 standard must be accepted and that the FISA Court does not 24 have to start quantifying what the purpose is. You see, 25 under the statute the Attorney General is not going -- this

1 information however it's acquired or whatever the motivation
2 of that attorney, the Attorney General might be at the time
3 the application is submitted to the Court, that motivation
4 may change later on. The Attorney General has to decide 5 later whether or not that information once acquired will be 6 used for a prosecution. And it seems inconceivable -- you 7 posit something that's theoretically possible but in the real 8 world I do not think it's possible. I do not think it is 9 possible that once this information is obtained if it has to 10 do with terrorists and it has to do with agents of foreign 11 powers who are deemed under the definitions of the statute to 12 be violating or could be violating or might be violating the 13 criminal laws of the United States, that that information 14 would then be put in a box someplace that could only and 15 exclusively and invariably be used for a criminal 16 prosecution. The Attorney General might decide to go forward 17 with that prosecution, but would that information be 18 discarded? I don't think so. I think that information would 19 still be a part of the information that is acquired with 20 respect to a threat from people that want to violate the 21 criminal laws who are agents of a foreign Government.

22 In other words, I still don't buy the dichotomy, 23 however persuasive it might be packaged in terms of, well, if 24 you have only this in mind and only this and you can only do 25 that, I don't think that's realistic. And I think also that

1 that -- the focus on that amendment to the statute has to be 2 informed by the circumstances, the history and 1806(k) which 3 means that the consultation is permissible and the 4 consultation and coordination, whatever it might be, can't 5 preclude -- cannot be used as Justification to preclude the 6 issuance of the Order.

7 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Isn't it a general proposition 8 that you do not look to an existing Congress to interpret the 9 language of a prior Congress except under one exception, when 10 the new Congress amends a statute, and then its understanding 11 of an old statute becomes relevant even if the understanding 12 is incorrect?

13 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Under certain

14 circumstances, yes, but also that repeal or alteration by 15 implication is disfavored, and we've got a statute where it 16 is not by any means clear that Congress was A), doing that or 17 B), making it more difficult. It is inconceivable to me that 18 the Court would accept an explanation that Congress was 19 intending to validate something that was creating a serious 20 difficult problem for the Executive to do that job, the 21 responsibility given to it by the statute in the 22 circumstances which we're all facing at that particular 23 point.

24 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Did you testify before Congress?

25 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: No.

1 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Did Mr. Kris testify before
2 Congress on this legislation?

3 MR. KRIS: Yes, yes, I did.

4 JUDGE SILBERMAN: May I ask him a question?

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, of course.

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Mr. Kris, when you testified
7 before Congress in support of the change to a significant 8 purpose did you ever indicate to Congress the argument that's 9 being presented to us, that the original FISA statute did not 10 require a primary purpose?

11 MR. KRIS: Only in passing. I was testifying, I
12 think, on September 24th in the Senate Intelligence Committee 13 about our proposal which at that time was "a purpose" which 14 was later pushed back to "significant purpose." So I was 15 focused on that and a number of other provisions in the bill.

16 I do recall from my testimony and reviewing the transcript
17 which is available on Westlaw, a very quick passing reference 18 to this idea that prosecution of a spy and terrorist is also 19 a protective method within the ambit of --

20 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Is it not fair to say that 21 Congress was certainly under the impression that the primary 22 purpose test stemmed from FISA, which is one of the reasons
23 they amended it. That is the reason they amended it.

24 MR. KRIS: I don't know if it stems from FISA. As 25 Mr. Olson was saying, I am saying it is the reality of the

1 Court decisions.

2 JUDGE SILBERMAN: No, Congress thought it stemmed
3 from FISA, whether or not it's true. I read the statements 4 of Senator Leahy, Senator Wellstone, Senator Feinstein. They 5 all seemed to believe that the primary purpose test is in 6 FISA.

7 MR. KRIS: Yes, at least as interpreted by the 8 courts, but I'm not sure, I think what Mr. Olson is saying is 9 that when you have two legislative amendments to a statute, 10 one of which comes from the Executive Branch, another one of 11 which is proposed by Congress itself, I don't think it's 12 correct to read them as nullifying each other the way you're 13 suggesting.

14 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, the other thing 15 that I would add is that I don't think it is advisable to 16 assume that this Congress was unfamiliar with the history and 17 the reports and the ample explanation that was given by the 18 1978 Congress and I will refer, if I may, to the House

19 Report, I think it's the same one that I referred to earlier 20 which is quoted on page 37 of our brief. In 1978. Judge 21 Silberman, the legislative history is replete with 22 understanding as is -- as is the Patriot Act, understanding 23 that foreign intelligence may be used in a variety of ways.
24 The last sentence, the last two sentences of the quote on 25 page 37 of our brief to which I'm referring which is from

1 page 49 of the House Report, 1978, the House said, "Obviously 2 use of foreign intelligence information as evidence in a 3 criminal trial is one way the Government can lawfully protect 4 against clandestine intelligence activity, sabotage and 5 international terrorism. The bill therefore explicitly 6 recognizes that information which is evidence of crimes
7 involving those things can be sought, retained and used 8 pursuant to this bill."

9 JUDGE SILBERMAN: What about the Attorney General's 10 own report? I have a copy of one of the reports going back 11 to, I think, May, 2000, and Congress would have had this, I'm 12 sure. The statute does not require the sole purpose of the 13 FISA coverage is to obtain foreign intelligence information, 14 although it seems clearly somebody obtaining foreign 15 intelligence information cannot be "a purpose". Instead, the 16 cases suggest that the primary purpose of FISA intelligence 17 must be primary purposes information as opposed to criminal.
18 Certainly the Justice Department seems to have accepted these 19 judicial opinions and told Congress it did.

20 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: There's no question about 21 that. And the Circuit Court decisions you referred, the 22 Ninth Circuit Court decision goes in the other direction.

23 JUDGE SILBERMAN: They just reserved the issue.

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, none of those are 25 conclusive one way or the other on this subject. So there is

1 no Federal Court of Appeals law that should guide you or 2 constrain your decisions with respect to it. The Court --
3 yes, the Justice Department regrettably, in my opinion, went 4 along with where the FISA Court was taking -- maybe they were 5 hand in hand, there's no point in saying someone was wrong, 6 where someone was responsible for this, but the outcome was 7 wrong. The very report which you just referred to describes 8 in tragic detail how an intelligence investigation can go 9 wrong when the people who are working to accomplish these 10 objectives do not talk to one another.

11 At one point I was talking about -- in preparation
12 for this argument, and I talked about the concept of a 13 surgeon and the anesthesiologist not communicating with one 14 another except through the hospital administrator about the 15 condition on a moment-to-moment basis of a patient who is on 16 the operating table. And someone said you've got it a lot 17 more easy than it is, if that operation is taking place in 18 Los Angeles and the person that has to be consulted and 19 scheduled for a consultation is in Washington and there are 20 only certain times during the week when that can happen.
21 Instead of a manic exchange of information when people who

22 are attempting to accomplish a result have in the way of 23 communication, we have made it virtually impossible.

24 As I said earlier in order to be able to connect 25 the dots someone has got to have knowledge of those various

1 different dots. We can't say that the constraints under 2 which we're operating now caused what happened or failed to 3 prevent what happened or what happened on September 11th 4 could have been prevented had we done this the right way, but 5 we do know, I have no doubt whatsoever, if one would want to 6 make it difficult for us to detect and prevent another
7 September 11th, this is the way I'd go about doing it. I 8 would allow people that have intelligence from here not to 9 talk with people who are experienced here. I would allow 10 people that gather intelligence not talk to people who have 11 the resources of a grand jury or immunity who can obtain 12 other information. I would not allow knowledge with respect 13 to a terrorist ring be brought to the attention of someone 14 who can put legal pressure on someone to come over to the 15 other side. All of these things, each of you know as Judges 16 who have dealt with the criminal justice system, there are 17 resources that are available to prosecutors that aren't just 18 prosecutorial. That law enforcement, law enforcement, 19 broadly speaking, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, is 20 engaged in law enforcement and collects this information, law 21 enforcement people are engaged in intelligence gathering.
22 There is no rational bifurcation by which Government can 23 operate in this fashion. It blinks reality to suggest that 24 people can't communicate with one another.

25 Therefore, yes, we have ourselves in this dilemma

1 that makes us ineffective and inefficient and unable to deal 2 with threats against our people and our country because of 3 the acceptance by the Court of this false dichotomy and the 4 acceptance of the Executive Branch with it.

5 When FISA was passed, the nature of the threat to 6 this country was different than it is today. Most 7 intelligence matters were Government to Government. We had 8 people that were operating on behalf of a Government and 9 prosecutions weren't maybe as often, although they were 10 certainly contemplated by the statute. Because espionage and 11 others acts could be dealt with Government to Government.
12 People could have been sent out of the country. That sort of 13 thing could take place. But yet the statute did contemplate
14 international terrorism. I don't think it contemplated it 15 quite the way we see it now, but it enacted the tools 16 necessary for the Government to protect its citizens against 17 that kind of threat. And because of the history that got us 18 into this dreadful box that we're in today it was realized at 19 the time this Patriot Act was being considered and amendments
20 to FISA weren't the only things that were being considered, 21 but because the terrible dilemma was recognized by Congress 22 and to change "the purpose" to "a significant purpose" made 23 it presumably easier for the Government to do what we know
24 the Government needs to do and we know what the Government 25 was intended to do when FISA was passed, and because the

1 Congress went on and enacted 1806(k) to make it clear that 2 consultation and coordination was not something that could 3 prevent the certification or the granting of the order.

4 What the FISA Court did on May 17th is flatly 5 inconsistent with 1806(k) and flatly inconsistent with the 6 purpose.

7 JUDGE GUY: Let me ask this, they did announce that 8 no one is supposed to leave the room, but maybe this is a 9 good time to give everybody an opportunity to leave the room 10 and we'll take a ten-minute recess.

11 (Recess)

12 JUDGE GUY: Now, let me just say that for the 13 balance of the proceedings -- I just was talking to my two 14 colleagues and we wanted to make sure that we did not 15 discontinue this until the three of us had answered any 16 questions that we might have but conversely we certainly 17 don't want to discontinue it until you've had any opportunity 18 to present anything to us that you haven't presented as yet.
19 So does any of what has transpired to this point suggest to 20 any of you that there's something that you need to say 21 affirmatively and not in response to a specific question?

22 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I may say thank you, Your 23 Honor. Because we got you the so-called Los Alamos report 24 which is also referred to as the Attorney General report, 25 relatively late in the day, I would simply add that I believe

1 we supplied you with sufficient copies but to the extent that

2 we can amplify that, we'd be happy to do that. We submitted
3 those when we did because as I was preparing that I thought 4 what additional information this Court would want to have as 5 we perceived the magnitude of the problem. Those two 6 documents we wanted you to have.

7 What has come up here so far is we can provide you 8 with an additional discussion of constitutional questions at 9 whatever schedule would be comfortable to you. We can 10 probably do it within a week. And before you respond to 11 that, I would say that the other thing we would supply is a 12 comparison of FISA and Title III which is interesting, I 13 thought, both with respect to the issue of probable cause and 14 the minimization issue and then thirdly, I thought that it 15 might be helpful which we've done in our brief but which we 16 could amplify briefly, a brief comparison of the two 17 principal changes, the 1806(k) and the "a significant 18 purpose" change and the sense of how it could be reconciled.
19 I would say if today is the 9th if we could have a week from 20 tomorrow maybe to provide those.

21 JUDGE GUY: That's fine. Really we don't need to 22 set limits because you feel the sense of urgency of this, and 23 so without us telling you we know you'll submit something 24 that is only constrained in time, by your wanting to put the 25 best product forward that would help us.

1 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Exactly. We very much 2 are concerned that we get everything to you that we can as 3 quickly as possible.

4 JUDGE SILBERMAN: The memorandum on 5 constitutionality should assume arguendo your second argument 6 rather than your first, your second alternative argument that 7 the significant test is relaxation of the primary purpose
8 test. That's your second alternative argument in the brief.
9 I recognize that you don't like to be driven back to the 10 second argument but that's where the constitutional question 11 would come. Otherwise it would be a question whether FISA as 12 initially passed was constitutional. What you would view, I 13 suppose, as a similar kind of issue insofar as it did not 14 require a primary purpose. Insofar as it did not follow 15 Truong. Either way. Or another way of putting it is Truong 16 constitutionally compelled.

17 Now, let me ask you this question. This is an 18 ex-parte proceeding after all. If we conclude that it is 19 constitutional, is it not fair to suggest that our opinion
20 would be better for the Government if it specifically 21 analyzed it and so concluded?

22 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes.

23 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Because it seems to me eventually 24 as a parallel question or corollary we expect to get some 25 amicus briefs. Do you have a view what we should do with

1 amicus briefs?

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Our position is we have 3 no objection to the Court receiving amicus briefs. In fact,
4 I think it's probably good that the Court receive amicus
5 briefs.

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: That sets a precedent for this 7 process which worries me a little bit.

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I understand that. I 9 think that this is an unusual situation because it would not 10 typically have occurred that this opinion would become public 11 or that this appeal would have been taken or that it was 12 going to be scheduled on a schedule -- I don't think a Court 13 deciding in a particular case to accept or not accept an 14 amicus brief has ever been done as requiring the Court to 15 always do that or invariably do that, but because this is a 16 special issue and it is important and for the very reasons
17 that you imply when you say that it might be good to address
18 and resolve the constitutional questions, I think it's good 19 for the process.

20 We would like, again with the constraints that we 21 want, to get this -- this is one of those cases where we can 22 say it's a potential matter of life or death and so, 23 therefore, we want to get it done, we want to make sure we 24 get to you everything we can as quickly as we can but I would 25 like to once we saw those amicus briefs have an option within

1 two days or so, again we'll go as fast as we can, to respond 2 to those.

3 JUDGE SILBERMAN: We have a letter that the ACLU is 4 going to file a brief sometime around the 20th, is it?

5 JUDGE GUY: I have not seen that.

6 THE COURT: Have we seen it?

7 MS. RYAN: Yes, it's the 20th.

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: If I had a preference, it 9 would be that they would do it more quickly, but that's not 10 for me to say.

11 JUDGE SILBERMAN: That's ten days. Yours would be 12 a week. About the same time. But then you would get a week 13 and you would want time to respond if you thought there was 14 something of importance.

15 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: We'll accept whatever the 16 Court decides with respect the scheduling and we will work 17 very very fast. We appreciate the fact that the Court 18 scheduled this hearing so quickly, and because things are 19 occurring that we know are occurring that concern us with 20 respect to this subject we want --

21 JUDGE SILBERMAN: There are two areas that I'd like 22 to ask questions on if the Chief would indulge me. The first 23 of which is you did not specifically explicitly at any time
24 in the brief make an argument that the relative intrusiveness
25 of the District Court's -- FISA Court's opinion had itself

1 constitutional implications or even proprietary implications
2 with respect to the limits of judicial power. I am familiar 3 with a case, as you are, where Justice Rehnquist in the 4 opinion once said in another context this would be a 5 bureaucratic success story but in this context it has 6 constitutional implications. Do you recall the case?

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes.

a JUDGE SILBERMAN: We are an Article III Court.
9 Insofar as the FISA Court set forth certain procedures for 10 the Justice Department to follow in the gathering of 11 information, set forth barriers to discussions between 12 various divisions of the Department and went so far as to 13 require a chaperone, does that have Article III implications.

14 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I -- yes, it has 15 Article III implications and it has Article II implications.
16 And the last two points on my notes are things that I wanted
17 to say, although I touched on them earlier, address those two 18 related points. That to the extent that the statute as it's 19 being implemented hasn't invited the FISA Court into making 20 substantive judgments about what's the right motivation or 21 what are the right circumstances under which the President
22 can or should or may seek to develop information necessary
23 for the President to perform his function, that raises 24 Article III implications and Article II implications, and to 25 the extent that the FISC is purporting to reorganize the

1 Executive Branch, the so-called chaperone function, I don't 2 think Congress could constitutionally tell the Executive or 3 the Attorney General that he could not talk to this 4 subordinate without involving that subordinate. And I
5 certainly don't think the Court can do so.

6 I think it is -- it was -- it originated in part 7 with the Attorney General's I think misconceived 1995
8 protocol, but I think the Court -- and the Court was 9 certainly well intended because I think in one sense the 10 Court is receiving applications, and a regular litigant 11 before the Court is the office of Intelligence Policy and 12 Review and that may be a matter of good Government as far as 13 the Court is concerned and it may be a matter of good 14 Government as far as the Executive Branch is concerned, but 15 it does raise very serious constitutional questions in my 16 judgment.

17 We did not focus on that in the brief and we may 18 include a discussion of that in our constitutional brief that 19 we file, but Judge Silberman, the idea that the Court can 20 interdict the free flow of information that the Attorney 21 General or the President needs to save the lives of people in 22 this country where there's no requirement in the statute or 23 anyplace else that gives the Court the power to do that, I 24 think is very very serious.

25 JUDGE SILBERMAN: My next question has to do with

1 how we should look at the FISA application in constitutional 2 terms. Should we look at it as a warrantless process?
3 Should we look at it as a modified warrant? And how -- what 4 are the differences that we should focus on between the FISA
5 application and let us say, a Title III. It's fair to say,
6 is it not, the biggest difference is that under Title III you
7 have a particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment
8 which we do not have here. Is that correct?

9 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes.

10 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Does that mean that we should 11 look at this as a non-Fourth Amendment warrant or a warrant, 12 if you wish.

13 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That's a very good

14 question and perhaps we can include some of that in our 15 constitutional issue because I think I can give a better 16 answer in writing than spontaneously here, although I've 17 given it some thought. It seems to me that the Fourth 18 Amendment collectively in terms of its reasonableness
19 requirement and its warrant requirement and what we have here 20 with respect to the systems in advance based upon probable 21 of --

22 JUDGE SILBERMAN: A different kind of probable 23 cause.

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: A different kind of 25 probable cause, but the Constitution doesn't specify any kind

1 of probable cause.

2 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Precisely.

3 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And it's a probable cause
4 shaped by the need. And the reason why we wanted to give you
5 this analysis of Title III and FISA side by side is that 6 there is a great deal of ultimately similarity in the 7 standard in that the definition of an agent of a foreign 8 power includes references to violations that the individual 9 not only has connections with the foreign Government or a 10 foreign power but that is engaged in activities that involve, 11 could involve or may involve the violation of the criminal 12 statutes of the United States. So to that extent there's a 13 lot of similarity here. The difference is that it is taking 14 into consideration the nature of the threat that's being 15 addressed by the President, the nature of the circumstances.

16 That is to say, a foreign power engaged in criminal 17 activities might be different, the level of threat might be 18 different, the level of resistance to information and 19 barriers to information since we're talking about --

20 JUDGE SILBERMAN: And the key to the reasonableness 21 of any search is the exterior threat.

22 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes. And so, therefore, 23 I think those issues have to be looked at in that context, 24 and I think that we will satisfy you that --

25 JUDGE SILBERMAN: There are two ways to look at

1 this. One can say this is not covered by the Constitution
2 altogether because it's inherent executive power. The second 3 way is to say, well, it's a reasonable search because the 4 threat is so great even if it was constitutionally covered.

5 The difference between -- is it fair to say the 6 difference between a Fourth Amendment, classic Fourth
7 Amendment search and a FISA application, on the one hand a 8 FISA application is a little more searching because you have 9 to establish the individual you're targeting but you don't 10 have to under Title III if you know the facility is being 11 used to commit a crime and you don't know who the individual 12 is committing the crime and you don't have to identify him.
13 You do have to identify the target here and you have to 14 identify the agency of a foreign power. You do not have to 15 identify the facility used. Therefore you don't have the 16 particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment.

17 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON:- I agree with all that you

18 said. There also is a certification with that application 19 that's being filed and the means that are suggested to 20 implement that application are reasonably calculated to 21 obtain foreign intelligence, and that other methods are 22 insufficient or inadequate, I can't remember the statutory 23 term, to obtain that information.

24 JUDGE SILBERMAN: But do you not have to show that 25 it is likely the particular facility that you're searching,

1 phonetapping or whatever, is likely to produce anything?

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I think that's correct.

3 And I will be corrected immediately upon leaving the room if 4 I'm not.

5 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Now, if that were done on a 6 domestic case, if this procedure was used domestically, it 7 clearly would be unconstitutional.

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I haven't made that 9 analysis. I'm not quarrelling with it.

10 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Yes. I thought that would be an 11 accepted proposition. So, therefore, you start with that and 12 then you figure what do we have here? Do we have the 13 President's inherent executive authority so it doesn't really 14 matter what procedure you use, or are the procedures tailored 15 to the threat and therefore it's a reasonable search even 16 under the Fourth Amendment since the particularity of the 17 Fourth Amendment would have to somehow be relaxed, given the 18 nature of the threat.

19 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, I agree that both of 20 those issues are informed by how the Court approaches it and 21 how we approach it because we do have those characteristics.

22 I don't want to put it as I sit here today in any particular 23 box because I think that the Fourth Amendment to the extent
24 it limits something, and the Court can say the Fourth 25 Amendment doesn't apply and the Constitution doesn't apply,

1 yet the Constitution applies to everything that the Executive 2 does. That's why I'm resisting that analytical framework.

3 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'm a little puzzled exactly how 4 to look at that.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: We'll address that.

6 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Could we see some of the people
7 who actually filed applications for FISA? What do they 8 typically have that would not be in a Title III and what does 9 a Title III have --

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: We talked about that 11 because we anticipated that. We're prepared to respond to 12 that question. I can't remember who is the best person.
13 It's a combination of people.

14 JUDGE GUY: I thought you were submitting a 15 document or had submitted it that does the comparison between 16 Title III and --

17 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, that's what we 18 intend to do.

19 JUDGE SILBERMAN: The documents will answer my 20 question better than anyone?

21 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I believe so. And what I

22 did in connection with this is compile illustrative Title III 23 applications and illustrative FISA applications which we 24 could attach to that brief which I think would answer it 25 better than anything that we could do here today.

1 JUDGE SILBERMAN: That's fine.

2 JUDGE LEAVY: Now, I'm -- the first one question I
3 have is once again under 1802 I think it is, that's the one 4 where surveillance is undertaken without a warrant.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes.

6 JUDGE LEAVY: Or without an order of the Court.
7 That (2) speaks of minimization procedures and under 8 (a) (1) (c) requires an Attorney General report such 9 minimization procedures and changes thereto to the House
10 Permanent Select Subcommittee on intelligence. Has anything 11 been done under that Section?

12 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: May I inquire?

13 JUDGE LEAVY: Yes. Reporting minimization
14 procedures to the House Permanent Select Subcommittee on 15 Intelligence.

16 MR. BAKER: There are standard minimization
17 procedures both for the regular FISA surveillance that we've 18 been talking about as well as the 1802 surveillance, and I 19 believe those were submitted to Congress when they were 20 adopted.

21 JUDGE LEAVY. Okay. So not only has the Justice
22 Department adopted the procedures that we are talking about 23 and reported them to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance

24 Court but it has also adopted procedures and reported them to 25 the Committee for the purposes of 1802.

1 MR. BAKER: I believe that's correct, Your Honor.
2 I can check to verify for the record that we actually 3 submitted those because they date back sometime.

4 JUDGE LEAVY: And do we know whether they are the 5 same or different?

6 MR. BAKER: They are different to some degree, 7 Judge. I did not review those this morning before coming in 8 but they are different to some degree because of the types of 9 information that they focus on.

10 JUDGE LEAVY: And do they go along the same lines
11 of this attempt to isolate segments of the investigative arm 12 of the Justice Department?

13 MR. BAKER: They're different procedures and they 14 break it down and they go through the acquisition, retention 15 and dissemination.

16 JUDGE LEAVY: But they're ostensibly minimization 17 procedures and that's all I'm interested in.

18 MR. BAKER: They're clearly minimization
19 procedures.

20 MR. KRIS: Both the 1802 minimization procedures 21 and the ordinary minimization procedures really don't address 22 coordination between intelligence and law enforcement. The 23 coordination issue is addressed in the separate procedures
24 that were adopted in July, 1995 and the ones adopted in 2002
25 by the Attorney General.

1 JUDGE LEAVY: Under the banner of minimization.

2 MR. BAKER: we do have provisions in there where 3 you talk about dissemination of information that implement 4 the minimization standard that we were talking about before.

5 JUDGE LEAVY: Now have some questions that may 6 sound very basic, so bear with me. The Office of Policy
7 Review --

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: The Office of 9 Intelligence Policy and Review.

10 JUDGE LEAVY: And Review is constituted to include 11 lawyers only?

12 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Let me ask Mr. Baker to 13 address that.

14 MR. BAKER: I'm Counsel for Intelligence Policy, so 15 I'm the head of the Office of Intelligence Policy and Review 16 and we have approximately 30 attorneys on staff as well as 17 support people, secretaries, paralegals and so on as you 18 would in any sort of legal office.

19 JUDGE LEAVY: And what role does that office play
20 in each application? 1

21 MR. BAKER: With respect to each application we 22 both prepare the applications and then present them to the 23 Court in this room. So we are the attorneys on behalf of the 24 United States who appear before the FISA Court.

25 JUDGE LEAVY: And what decisionmaking goes on at

1 that level with respect to minimizations?

2 MR. BAKER: Well, we prepare the applications, we 3 include in them a description of the minimization procedures.
4 There are standard minimization procedures that have been in 5 existence for some time that tell the FBI how to operate its 6 business. So those are included by reference in every 7 application by saying we will follow the standard 8 minimization procedures.

9 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: If I might interject.
10 Those procedures are intended to avoid the acquisition, 11 retention, utilization of information that is beyond the 12 purpose for which the FISA -- it isn't intended to do what 13 the FISA Court was talking about in the May 17th Order. It's 14 intended to limit the acquisition of intelligence in a manner 15 which is inconsistent with the statute to avoid misuse of the 16 information that is collected incidentally in connection with 17 that.

18 JMGE LEAVY: Has that office ever done in any 19 case -- was the Court's Order a brand new thing to the 20 office? Had you done anything that you would say conformed 21 to that Order or anticipated it or anything like that?

22 MR. BAKER: Normally we include in every 23 application a statement that the procedures that would apply
24 are the standard procedures. And the procedures I'm talking 25 about go back to 1997, there are various versions of it, but

1 there are current standard minimization procedure is for 2 U.S.-person FISAs, for non-U.S.-persons FISA, for 3 foreign-power FISAS.

4 I believe -- if you want to look historically, I 5 believe that the first applications that we filed with the 6 FISA Court after the enactment of the Patriot Act, the Court 7 issued supplemental Orders saying that in addition to the 8 standard minimization procedures we were to also follow the 9 July, 1995 Attorney General procedures which were, in the 10 Court's view, minimization procedures. So starting I believe 11 back in about November of last year we were ordered to follow 12 those as well.

13 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Were the '95 regulations
14 described as minimization procedures?

15 MR. BAKER: Yes, Your Honor.

16 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Described by the FISA
17 Court.

18 JUDGE SILBERMAN: No, by Justice when they issued 19 the '95 regulations which pursued the primary purpose 20 demarcation, were they described as minimization procedures?

21 MR. BAKER: No, I believe the first time they were 22 described as minimization procedures was by the FISA Court.
23 What happened was in the Orders in November we were told 24 basically put those in all your standard Orders because 25 that's what we want.

1 MR. KRIS: Just so the Court is aware, those orders
2 with the handwritten annotations by the FISA Court are part 3 of the record in this case. They're tab eight in our 4 appendix that we filed in the FISC with this application.

5 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I have one question.

6 JUDGE GUY: Excuse me, I wasn't sure you were done,
7 Judge Leavy, in the sense that I thought you were asking 8 about the so-called chaperone requirement.

9 JUDGE LEAVY: That's what I was trying to get to.
10 To what extent did this office have anything to do with 11 assigning tasks within the FBI as to who should be 12 investigating crime and who should be investigating foreign 13 intelligence purpose? Did you do anything by way of 14 administering, if you will, the collection of information?

15 MR. BAKER: Well, the FBI is responsible for 16 running its own show and we don't have authority to tell the 17 FBI what to do in that sense. However, we have implemented 18 the -- we have been part of implementing the 1995 procedures 19 since they were set forth by the Attorney General, and so we 20 have been involved in that entire process of interactions
21 between the FBI and the Criminal Division.

22 JUDGE LEAVY. But no administrative authority.

23 MR. BAKER: We're a separate component.

24 JUDGE GUY: Before the FISA Order you never told 25 anybody don't get together and talk about this unless one of

1 my attorneys is present. Or did you?

2 MR. BAKER: Judge, I'm trying to remember if in any 3 particular case -- that may have come up. Because in 4 implementing the 1995 procedures I think those kinds of 5 conversations may have been had. The AGRT Bellows report has 6 a lengthy discussion about the history of all this and the 7 interaction and makes an assessment about the relationship

8 between the various components.

9 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: What Mr. Baker is 10 referring to is the document which I have been referring to 11 as the Los Alamos report, it's volume four, the Attorney 12 General Review Team. I think that's very illuminating on 13 that point because it demonstrates the extent to which that 14 was done and the extent to which, in my judgment, grave 15 damage to the ability of anybody to accomplish anything was 16 done as a result.

17 JUDGE LEAVY: Okay. So my specific question will 18 probably be answered when I get around to reading it.

19 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: At least in part.

20 JUDGE LEAVY: All tight.

21 JUDGE GUY: Judge Leavy, I'm still not sure what 22 the answer to the question is and now I'm interested in it in 23 the sense did the FISA Court institutionalize what you were 24 already doing with the chaperone requirement, or did they 25 superimpose that requirement out of thin air on you?

1 MR. BAKER: The trouble I'm having, Judge, is that 2 we work on thousands of cases a year and I'm just trying to 3 give you an honest answer, and maybe it's one that we need to 4 reflect upon and come back and address it in writing as part 5 of the other submissions. I'll just trying to remember in 6 every case -- we've worked on a lot of cases over the years, 7 I just don't remember.

8 MR. KRIS: I think I can say something in the way
9 of an answer. The July 1995 procedures do contemplate

10 informing OIPR when there's going to be a consultation
11 between the Criminal Division and the FBI intelligence 12 section. And the August 6, 2001 memorandum from Mr. Thompson
13 also contemplated that OIPR will be invited.

14 Now, there's a certain amount of I guess what can 15 be called inside baseball here in terms of our relationship 16 with the FISC and indeed the August 6th memo was promulgated 17 by the Deputy only following a conversation with the 18 presiding Judge of FISC at that time, Judge Lamberth. And so 19 there is a less rigid so-called chaperone requirement of 20 sorts in predecessor documents but, number one, I think, and 21 this is something that Mr. Olson has been talking about, 22 sometimes the Department will propose something because we 23 know what is needed in a particular instance to get past go 24 with the Court. And because we understand what the law is as 25 interpreted and implied by the Court. Also, the chaperone

1 requirement I think takes on much more significance once the 2 range of consultations that are permitted is expanded. If 3 they can't give advice anyway, the prosecutors can't give 4 advice anyway because of the primary purpose, then fewer 5 consultations will occur. As you have more of them it 6 becomes more significant.

7 JUDGE GUY: But anyway initially the requirement 8 was self-imposed, albeit perhaps anticipating what would 9 please the audience that you were presenting it to.

10 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I think the correct
11 answer is that plus. I think that there was a substantial

12 encouragement that was coming from the Court and concern by 13 the Attorney General in 1995 that there was a slippage in 14 terms of whether all that dialogue was taking place in the 15 right context and concern, as again explained in this report, 16 that possibly if there was too much communication between the 17 intelligence gatherer and the potential prosecutor, that that 18 might adversely affect the success of a criminal prosecution 19 and so forth. So it evolved in that fashion, became 20 formalized in July of 1995 with the Attorney General's Order, 21 and then continued to evolve until we got to the May 17th
22 Order of the Court which then made it even more 23 institutionalized and added some very very severe 24 restrictions which hadn't existed at least in prior concerns 25 of it up to that point. So it kept getting worse up to May

1 17th.

2 JUDGE LEAVY: When did the word chaperone come into 3 use in connection with this arrangement

4 MR. KRIS: I believe that that word came into use 5 when the brief was being drafted.

6 JUDGE LEAVY: So it's not something that -- and 7 when did the --

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I would have used the 9 word straightjacket.

10 JUDGE LEAVY: All right. And when did this concept 11 of a wall, the so-called wall, when was it visualized as 12 that?

13 MR. KRIS: Well, at least as far back as the 14 millennium cases.

15 MR. BAKER: I believe there were walls as such 16 separating the intelligence investigators and criminal 17 investigators in other cases dating back a number of years, 18 at least to the early nineties.

19 JUDGE LEAVY: All right. And in the mechanical 20 aspects of presenting these applications to the Court what 21 does Mr. Kornblum have to do with that? At what point is he 22 involved in any of the decision making?

23 MR. BAKER: Mr. Kornblum is currently the legal 24 advisor to the FISA Court. He works for the judiciary. He 25 does not work for the Department of Justice.

1 JUDGE LEAVY: And for how long.

2 MR. BAKER: For two years or so. He used to have 3 Ms. Skelly-Nolen's job and then was Senior Counsel.

4 JUDGE SILBERMAN: He was Deputy Counsel and then he 5 was Senior Counsel.

6 MR. BAKER: Yes, I replaced him as Deputy Counsel
7 and I've now become the Counsel.

8 JUDGE LEAVY: Back to the Office of Intelligence 9 Policy and Review, now, is there some sort of group review of 10 each application or is that done as lawyers would do it, one 11 will take a look at an application and make judgments about 12 what's needed, what's there, and you look at that or is there 13 some sort of a consultation among all of the office as to 14 whether or not all the motives are in place and all of that?

15 MR. BAKER: I'll describe how it currently works.

16 We assign one attorney to work with the FBI to prepare an 17 application.

18 JUDGE LEAVY: In a single case.

19 MR. BAKER: in a single case such as the case you 20 have in front of you. One attorney was assigned to that 21 case. An application was drafted, the application, the 22 declaration, certification, the proposed Orders. All that 23 was put together. It was then reviewed within our office.
24 We have an assistant counsel that reviews it and then Ms.
25 Skelly-Nolen reviews it, and in most cases I review it as

1 well. And it is also reviewed across the street. We refer 2 to the FBI as physically across the street. It's reviewed by 3 the substantive case agents at headquarters and in the field
4 offices to make sure that it's accurate and so on. And it's 5 also reviewed by the FBI General Counsel's office.

6 JUDGE LEAVY: Okay. And that's reviewed for 7 legality as well as the policy that goes into the 8 decisionmaking as to whether to ask for it in that case.

9 MR. BAKER: It's reviewed in all its totality
10 because at the end of the day our office makes a 11 recommendation to the Attorney General whether or not to sign 12 this application.

13 JUDGE LEAVY. And at what point in all of this is 14 the certification of purpose made?

is MR. BAKER: Those are prepared as part of the 16 package and they're sort of prepared along with the other 17 things that you're working on, and then the whole package is

18 reviewed in its totality as it goes through the process by 19 all these different players.

20 JUDGE LEAVY: And that certification is always made 21 by the Director of the FBI?

22 MR. BAKER: It's made by the Director of the FBI or 23 some other senior official. If it's not the FBI Director, 24 it's the Secretary of State, the Deputy Secretary of State, 25 the Director of Central Intelligence, the Deputy Director of

1 the CIA.

2 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And that occurs
3 immediately before or shortly before it then comes to the 4 Attorney General.

5 MR. BAKER: That's correct.

6 JUDGE GUY. Not to interrupt Judge Leavy, he wasn't 7 done, I'm sure, but in these applications over time a certain 8 amount of boilerplate gets developed, doesn't it?

9 MR. BAKER: Certainly.

10 JUDGE LEAVY: And then typically how much 11 interaction is there in presenting the application to the 12 Judge? Is it typically a yes-no answer on that or tinkered 13 with?

14 MR. BAKER: Typically we now have a Court session 15 scheduled every week and so what we will do, with all the 16 different Judges coming in, one Judge per week, we will file
17 the applications ahead of time so the Judge has time to read 18 the materials. And sometimes the Judge will call us in and 19 ask us questions or we'll wait until the session of the 20 Court, and at that point the attorney from OIPR, the FBI

21 agent will be present and then the Judge can ask them 22 whatever questions he or she may have.

23 JUDGE LEAVY: Does it frequently or very often 24 focus on the question of purpose? That is, the certification 25 of purpose?

1 MR. BAKER: Questions about purpose do come up. We 2 include -- we try to present to the Court ahead of time
3 obviously anything that we think the Court may ask about that 4 or be concerned about. Obviously all the material facts, and 5 so you will see in the applications, related criminal 6 matters. A section that describes in the declaration all the 7 related criminal matters and the certifications will refer to 8 those.

9 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: If I may amplify in part, 10 you know, the Order that was issued in connection with May 11 17th has this new rule, Rule 11 which is part of the record
12 that is before you which requires "All FISA applications 13 shall include informative descriptions of any ongoing 14 investigations of FISA targets, as well as the substance of 15 any consultations between the FBI and criminal prosecutors at 16 the Department of Justice or the United States Attorney's 17 Office." That's part of what we're here objecting to, but 18 that was added as a part of this process.

19 JUDGE LEAVY: Now, I can't get my hands on it 20 immediately but it's that portion of the decisionmaking by 21 the FISA Court that goes to you and you must accept that 22 unless you find it's clearly erroneous, am I right?

23 MR. BAKER: That's correct.

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: If the purpose is for 25 intelligence, foreign intelligence, that the Court, unless

1 I'm mistaken in reading the statute, must accept it, unless 2 it's clearly erroneous. The certification of purpose being 3 foreign intelligence.

4 JUDGE LEAVY: So now my reading on that is that 5 that is akin then to a purely factual finding, that here is a 6 factual assertion by the person whose mind set -- is the only 7 one who can tell us what the purpose is, right? And he says 8 the purpose is foreign intelligence. The Court then has to 9 simply decide whether or not he's telling the truth. Is that 10 a fair characterization of it or have you viewed it as 11 something else?

12 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: How they have viewed it 13 in the field, I'll let them answer, it seems to me that 14 because the definition requires a finding by that official 15 that there's a foreign agency, and foreign agency in 16 connection with terrorism or some of those other acts 17 requires the concept of the possibility that the activity 18 engaged in may involve or could involve federal criminal 19 activities, that that sort of equation might conceivably 20 contain some partial legal analysis as a part of them, but 21 the clearly erroneous standard it seems to me --

22 JUDGE LEAVY: Refers only to purpose, does it not?

23 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, but purpose of 24 obtaining foreign intelligence information as defined.

25 JUDGE LEAVY: Okay.

1 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Have I stated this 2 correctly?

3 MR. BAKER: Yes, I think that's right.

4 JUDGE LEAVY: Those are all the questions I have.
5 I hope that I haven't suggested a total misunderstanding of 6 all of this but, anyway, that's as much as I have in mind.

7 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: The same sort of 8 questions we've been asking.

9 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'm a little confused by the last 10 answer to Judge Leavy's question. I understood the clearly 11 erroneous test would also include whether there's probable 12 cause to believe the target is an agent of a foreign power.
13 Is that not true?

14 MR. BAKER: No, the Court makes a finding that 15 there's probable cause to believe that the person is an agent 16 of a foreign power and reviews the certification, in the 17 U.S.-person cases to determine whether or not the 18 representation made is clearly erroneous.

19 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I see, but in the determination 20 of whether it's probable cause would there also be any of the 21 facts asserted to suggest probable cause, are those facts 22 reviewed under clearly erroneous?

23 MR. KRIS: No. I'm sorry. I mean under 1805 the 24 Judge enters an Order if he finds that under 1805(a)(3)(a) 25 there is -- if he finds that there's probable cause to

1 believe that the target of the surveillance is a foreign 2 power or agent of a foreign power, and I think that 3 determination of probable is made in the usual way, but under 4 Subsection 1805(a) (5) that's where the clearly erroneous
5 standard comes in with respect to reviewing not the assertion 6 of facts going to probable cause but rather the certification 7 in 1804(a) (7).

8 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Which is, "Deems the 9 information sought to be foreign intelligence information, 10 that a significant purpose of the surveillance is to obtain 11 foreign intelligence information that cannot be reasonably 12 obtained by normal investigative techniques," et cetera.

13 JUDGE SILBERMAN: So that includes the type of 14 foreign information designated. That has to be judged under 15 the clearly erroneous standard.

16 MR. BAKER: If it's part of the -- yes.

17 JUDGE LFAIN: The certifications are not clearly 18 erroneous. And one of those certifications is for the 19 purpose, that only the person who tells us his purpose can 20 possibly know, unless -- and we would take his word unless we 21 think he is lying, right?

22 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes, unless it's clearly 23 erroneous. I think that connotes on the face of it.

24 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I have one more question.

25 JUDGE GUY: Absolutely.

1 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Mr. Olson, we'd like you to

2 answer a question that assumes arguendo that which you do not 3 wish to assume, that is to say, that you're reduced to your 4 second alternative argument, that the amendment to the 5 statute caused by the Patriot Act relaxed the primary purpose 6 test to a significant purpose test. But that therefore 7 implies that the other purpose would be criminal. If that's 8 the reading of the statute and that's your second alternative 9 argument, that's the appropriate reading of the statute, how 10 does one go about -- how does the Court go about determining 11 as part of the review that we've just been describing whether 12 there is a significant purpose or not? You have made the 13 argument that it is no longer a comparative question, but how 14 does the Court go about determining whether this is 15 significant purpose of seeking foreign intelligence 16 information as opposed to criminal prosecution?

17 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That goes back I think to 18 Judge Leavy's question, is that the official who has the 19 expertise and so forth and has reviewed the materials, 20 certifies that that is indeed the case. And that unless that 21 is clearly erroneous the Court must accept that.

22 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Give me an example of a clearly 23 erroneous certification?

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I think if the 25 application itself disclosed that it involved a behavior by

1 the target of an investigation and someone who was manifestly 2 not connected with any foreign agency or something like that.

3 JUDGE SILBERMAN: A criminal prosecution that did

4 not relate to foreign intelligence.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: The problem I have with 6 the premise is that -- I have to say that I think that the 7 problem that we have with the premise informs the answer to 8 that question because the range of information, and I don't 9 know whether -- you used the words criminal alternative that 10 appear throughout this is law enforcement which was even more 11 generalized than the notion of criminal prosecutions that are 12 in the statute, information that relates to the conduct, 13 activity, behavior of a person who engages in a conspiracy to 14 bomb a building, the Capitol or something like that, may very 15 well be, however it might relate to a criminal prosecution, 16 might also at the same time have very valuable significance 17 aside from the prosecution.

18 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I understand. Help me out. Give 19 me an example of one that would fall outside of the 20 significant purpose, assuming Congress meant --

21 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Well, I have trouble with 22 that, Judge Silberman --

23 JUDGE SILBERMAN: So do I. That's why I'm asking.

24 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: That's right. That's why
25 I think a construction of the statute that requires that box

1 is very difficult because the definition, even assuming what 2 you're talking about to the extent we're talking about a 3 United States person is that information necessary to 4 protect -- necessary to the ability of the United States to 5 protect against international terrorism.

6 Now, if that information in a particular case, 7 whether it involved a wife beater or a child pornographer or 8 someone who cheated on their taxes 15 years before gave the 9 President or those acting in his behalf the ability of 10 walking in and taking that person off the street because of 11 the other activities of the person, would that be necessary 12 to protect against the attack? It might be.

13 So that's why it's difficult for me to come up with 14 an illustration that accepts the premise which I think is 15 such a unworkable premise, especially if one considers what 16 the statute meant in the first instance, what the language of 17 the statute clearly means, and the desire of Congress to make 18 it easier, certainly not more difficult, for the President to 19 do the job which is the fundamental job, that is to say, to 20 protect against the terrorists.

21 JUDGE SILBERMAN: You can't think of any 22 hypothetical?

23 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: What we will do, if we 24 can collectively come up with something that will more --

25 JUDGE SILBERMAN: In your brief you suggested only

1 that the face of the application indicated something was 2 wrong. I don't quite understand what would be wrong though.
3 The face of the application, suppose the face of the 4 application indicated a desire to use foreign surveillance to 5 determine strictly a domestic crime, that would be -- but 6 then you wouldn't have an agent, you wouldn't have an agency.
7 You must have some substantive requirement here if

8 significant purpose is given its literal meaning, you must 9 have some logic to the interpretation of that section which 10 falls outside of the interpretation of an agent of a foreign 11 power.

12 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: And I suppose if the 13 application itself revealed that there was a purpose to take 14 personal advantage of someone who might be the subject of an 15 investigation, to blackmail that person, or if that person 16 had a domestic relationship and that person was seeing 17 another person's spouse or something like that, if that would 18 be the test on the face of things.

19 In other words, I'm suggesting that the standard is 20 relatively high for the very reason that it's difficult for 21 the judiciary to evaluate and secondguess what a high level 22 executive branch person attempting to fight terrorism is 23 attempting to do.

24 I thought the description of the process that Mr.
25 Baker gave is quite illuminating because it requires -- not

1 only does the statute require, but the manner in which the 2 statute is being implemented aside from these dysfunctional
3 aspects of it, puts responsibility squarely on top-level
4 Governmental officials to sign their name.

5 JUDGE SILBERMAN: I'll try one more time and I'll 6 give up. What other purpose is contemplated besides the 7 purpose of obtaining foreign intelligence information? By 8 stating significant purpose must to be obtain foreign 9 intelligence information necessarily implies there's another

10 kind of purpose.

11 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: It could be revenge, it
12 could be extortion. It could be vindictiveness.

13 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Under your alternative
14 argument -- your alternative argument is you can have a 15 primary purpose of seeking criminal prosecution. That's your 16 alternative argument in the brief. Nonetheless, a 17 significant purpose is to obtain foreign intelligence 18 information. That's the alternative argument in the brief in 19 which you accept the bifurcation.

20 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: For the purposes of 21 dealing with it.

22 JUDGE SILBERMAN: Exactly. That's my problem. So 23 that if you had then a total purpose of criminal prosecution, 24 does that mean you violate (B)?

25 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: I don't think so, Judge

1 Silberman, for the reason that I explained before.

2 JUDGE SILBERMAN: We're going around in circles.

3 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: We're going around in 4 circles but we're going around in circles because the real 5 world, the use of that information even if it is used for a 6 prosecution, it's impossible as I sit here for me in good 7 faith to imagine a situation and I think it would be 8 irresponsible for me to do so, imagine a situation where that 9 might not also be useful in something that comes out in 10 another FISA situation that might have come out six months 11 ago, given that we're dealing with an agent of a foreign

12 Government, to preclude that, that's something that won't 13 have importance to the President in a purely intelligence 14 context?

15 JUDGE GUY: Don't you use the Timothy McVeigh
16 situation as one that wouldn't allow you to get a FISA 17 warrant?

18 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: But that's not 19 necessarily for the purpose of being law enforcement. It's 20 because it's purely domestic. To the extent that answers
21 Judge Silberman's question, I was speaking of the law
22 enforcement dichotomy as opposed to the domestic dichotomy 23 which we do acknowledge exists.

24 JUDGE GUY: Anything else?

25 JUDGE LEAVY: No.

1 JUDGE GUY: Let me just ask one last question or 2 perhaps two questions. One, is there a third area that 3 doesn't concern us that still is ongoing? For example, if 4 the CIA wanted to search the apartment of an Iraqi diplomat 5 stationed in Brazil, I take it they wouldn't go before the 6 FISA Court to get an application.

7 MR. KRIS: They would not.

8 JUDGE GUY: That's the implication of U.S. person 9 to some degree as one of the very significant portions of the 10 FISA statute, is it not?

11 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Yes. That's why I said
12 at the very beginning I was focusing on that because I know
13 this Court is concerned with the application of the statute

14 as far as U.S. persons are concerned which is (b) (2) rather 15 than (b) (1) which relates to ny person other than a United 16 States person.

17 JUDGE GUY: Then let me close, and -- unless my 18 question triggers something on behalf of my colleagues. This 19 is a strange proceeding because it is not adversarial. It is 20 ex parte. And if one were to just read the transcript of 21 this hearing today one might think that the adversary, if 22 there was one, is what the insiders refer to as the FISC, the 23 lower body in this matter. And I want to say, first of all, 24 that to the degree that our questions have contributed to 25 that, they're intended for the purpose of gathering

1 information and that's all. But in that same vein, I used to 2 think as a District Judge that sometimes when a case of mine 3 went to the Court of Appeals, that I'd love to be there as 4 amicus and also be able to argue and in that vein putting 5 just for the purposes of argument sort of an advocate for the 6 FISA Court, if they were here today I suspect that they might 7 say something like the difficulty with the change in the 8 statute going to significant purpose is that the standard is 9 no longer quantifiable in any reasonable means, that any fool 10 who has done this for years can prepare an application that 11 would set forth prima facie material to indicate that there's 12 a significant purpose because significant purpose, like the 13 substantial evidence standard, doesn't foreclose the fact 14 that there is substantial evidence on the other side.
15 Similarly, the fact that a significant purpose may be the 16 gathering of foreign intelligence doesn't foreclose the fact 17 that a significant purpose might also be a criminal 18 prosecution. And given the fact, I'm now speaking, as you 19 know, the FISC representative, given the fact that we have 20 this situation and given the act that we see our charge

21 partially to be to protect U.S. persons, to extend to them 22 the same protections they would have under Title III and the 23 Fourth Amendment except insofar as those protections would 24 intrude on the foreign intelligence gathering ability, we 25 feel that these procedures that we've put in place to the

1 best of our ability are the only things that we can think of 2 to guarantee that there will still be some meaningful 3 requirement that this really be a foreign intelligence 4 matter, significant though it may be.

5 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: May I address that in 6 this way? There are several protections and the Congress was 7 aware of them. One, by making the Attorney General and a 8 high level official, either a national security advisor level
9 or someone who otherwise is appointed by the President, 10 confirmed by the Senate, to sign their name. That is one 11 assurance. Another one is that to the extent that this 12 information is going to be used at all in a criminal 13 procedure, the Attorney General must approve that. Number 14 three, notification is appropriate at that point to an 15 Article III Judge who is in charge of that. And there may be 16 suppression motions and legitimate -- and proceedings with 17 respect to the application of those individual rights under 18 those circumstances, and then there can be a review up the 19 line from the District Court's decision. But because they're 20 dealing with national security and international terrorism, 21 the Congress approved executive authority in an area where it 22 is even without Congressional approval, at its zenith. And 23 this process here by which the Court is going to regularly 24 receive these applications, it's going to see how they're 25 done, it's going to see the people that are applying them and

1 is going to see the Attorney General's signature, we submit 2 both of them from a constitutional standpoint and from a 3 statutory standpoint, that those protections exist.

4 I would also say that with respect to this Court, 5 we have great respect for the Judges on this Court. We 6 respectfully disagree with where we have come and we think 7 it's a very serious, very serious problem that the Executive 8 is dealing with at this juncture to where we have come, but 9 certainly the Court got to it because it was being 10 conscientious and serious about both its responsibilities to 11 the country and also for citizens, United States persons, who 12 were the subject of surveillance.

13 So I think that this process has been up to this 14 point very very effective, and to the extent that those -- 15 this may be an ex-parte procedure, but the Court and the 16 members of this Court are asking very very difficult, hard 17 questions, the same kind of questions I think that someone 18 who was an adversary, if there were one, would be asking the 19 Court to ask.

20 JUDGE GUY: There being nothing further, the Court 21 would thank all of the persons who appeared today. They've 22 been very helpful. And we assure you that we recognize that 23 there is some time urgency to all of this, and within the 24 constraints of preparing something meaningful we will do our 25 best to get a decision to you as soon as possible.

1 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Thank you.

2 JUDGE GUY: With that we're in recess on this 3 matter.

4 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Thank you.

5 JUDGE GUY: You may be excused.

6 SOLICITOR GENERAL OLSON: Thank you.
