United States District Court,

UNITED STATES of America, Plaintiff, and
Yonkers Branch—NAACP, et al.,
Plaintiff—Intervenors,
v.
YONKERS BOARD OF EDUCATION, et al.,
Defendants.

No. 80 CIV. 6761(LBS).

Dec. 21, 1998.

Synopsis

United States and civil rights organization brought school desegregation suit against State of New York, City of Yonkers, Urban Development Corporation (UDC), and others. Following deferral, 984 F.Supp. 687, of redetermination whether UDC conduct constituted “continuing wrong,” the District Court, Sand, J., held that UDC retained statutory authority to participate in remedying racially segregated housing situation and thus its failure to do so constituted “continuing wrong,” precluding statute of limitations defense.

So ordered.

OPINION AND ORDER

SAND, District Judge.

On October 8, 1997, following remand from the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, 96 F.3d 600 \(2d Cir.1996\), this Court entered an Opinion and Order (984 F.Supp. 687) which addressed all of the liability matters relating directly to the Yonkers Public Schools; deferred issuance of a housing remedy order directed to the State and deferred a redetermination of whether the Urban Development Corporation’s (UDC’s) conduct constituted a “continuing wrong” so that the NAACP’s action against the UDC was not time barred. The UDC has now waived the statute of limitations defense with regard to the housing claims, and this defense is therefore now moot.

I. The Nature of the UDC’s Wrong

The nature and magnitude of the role played by the UDC in perpetuating and fostering segregation of low income housing in one quadrant of Yonkers has been fully documented in prior opinions.<sup>1</sup> As the NAACP alleged in its Second Amended Complaint PP 38–42, the UDC’s initial entry into the Yonkers housing market reflected a commitment *652 to racially neutral, scattered-site housing but the UDC soon abandoned this effort.<sup>2</sup>

Furthermore, the Court of Appeals found that the UDC “had the power to take steps to remedy that segregation, and refused to exercise that power because they were capitulating to political pressures that they knew were racially motivated.” 96 F.3d at 613.

II. The Ability of the UDC to Engage in Remedial Housing Activities

It having been clearly determined by the Court of Appeals that the UDC's conduct constituted an actionable wrong, the critical question is whether that wrong "continued" to a time within the three year limitation period as the NAACP moved to add the UDC as a defendant in 1987. A determination whether a wrong continues turns on two principal considerations: the nature of the wrong (which has already been addressed) and the ability of the wrong-doer to take corrective action.

This Court previously had proceeded on the assumption, fostered by the arguments of the State Defendants, that the UDC had "gone out of the housing business" as a result of its fiscal crisis in the early 1970s.<sup>3</sup> Believing therefore that the UDC had long since ceased to play a role in the development of low-income and affordable housing projects, (880 F.Supp. 212) we found that no duty to correct could exist absent power to engage in remedial activities.

It is clear upon further inquiry, however, that the UDC at all relevant times was and continues to be in a position to engage in remedial housing activities. Regardless of the changes within the organization and its financing structure which took place in the mid-1970s, the UDC never lost its legislative mandate to build low income housing in New York State and has been continuously in a position to effect remedies to those segregative housing problems in Yonkers which it helped to create through its acquiescence in the City's segregative policy.

Established by the New York State Legislature in 1968 as a corporate governmental agency of the State, the UDC had the power to finance and develop low income housing and to "promise sound growth and development of municipalities by reconstruction and development in blighted and substandard areas and in the areas reasonably accessible thereto." Peters v. New York State Urban Development Corp., 41 A.D.2d 1008, 344 N.Y.S.2d 151 (N.Y.App.Div.1973). The UDC's mandate is contained in the New York State Urban Development Corporation Act ("Act"). N.Y. Unconsol. Law § 6251 et seq. (McKinney's 1979). The language of the Act conveys substantial powers upon the UDC, including, but not limited to, the power to acquire or contract to acquire land, to grant options to purchase any project or to review any leases, to prepare or cause to be prepared plans for construction or improvement of a site, to manage any project, to consult with others toward the goal of fulfilling the mandate of the Act, to lend money or to make mortgage loans, to borrow money and to invest funds of the UDC not required for immediate use.

It is clear on the face of the statute that, as a matter of law, the UDC is not in any way proscribed from continuing to erect low-income housing and other residential projects. Whether, as a result of fiscal policy or *653 constraints or a change of focus, it has refrained from doing so is another matter irrelevant to whether or not it has an obligation to do so.

In the 1970s the UDC lost the power to issue its own general purpose bonds. Since that time, the agency has concentrated its endeavors on "economic development projects," such as the refurbishment of the 42nd Street area in Manhattan (See Tr. Conf. of 10/14/97, at 19 (Statement of Anita Lehrmont, Counsel to UDC).) The UDC presently has a staff of approximately 300 engaged in economic development projects. The ability to construct, finance and manage residential housing projects is and has always been within the purview of the Corporation and its successor, the Empire Development Corporation.<sup>4</sup>

The significant statutory distinction between the former and the contemporary role of the UDC in the development of New York's affordable housing market consists of a 1973 amendment to N.Y. Unconsol. Law s 6265, "Special Provisions Relating to Residential Projects," which specifies that the UDC may not affirm new residential projects for a town or incorporated village where the local governing body submits objections. If, however, prior to submission of the plan, the local governing body has approved such a plan or executed an agreement with the UDC, which subsequently relied to its detriment on such approval, then the project may proceed. Although deprived of some of its original power and resources, the UDC was not stripped of its responsibility for housing, despite the fact that other agencies have since been created which also deal with housing in New York. We find that the UDC would be in a position to participate actively in the housing remedy.

We therefore find that the statute of limitations defense, which has been waived, does not bar the action against UDC for conduct for which the Court of Appeals has found it liable. This Court hereby directs the UDC and its Director to submit a plan within 30 days for the provision of resources to implement the Housing Remedy Order heretofore established by this Court or to provide other suggested means of addressing the violation of the right of the class members to nondiscriminatory housing.

SO ORDERED.

Footnotes

- <sup>1</sup> For an extensive discussion of the history of housing development and the origins of segregative housing in Yonkers, see United States v. Yonkers Bd. of Educ., 624 F.Supp. 1276, 1289–1376 (S.D.N.Y.1985). Though UDC was not a party to the original litigation, the 1985 opinion does describe the role of the UDC, in cooperation with the City Council of Yonkers, in the sponsorship and construction of seven of the subsidized housing projects for families built in Yonkers during the period 1968–1972. Id. 624 F.Supp. at 1314. That opinion addresses the role of the UDC, specifically, in the perpetuation of what this Court found to be “a pattern and practice of racial discrimination by City officials, pursued in response to constituent pressure to select or support only sites that would preserve existing patterns of racial segregation, and to reject or oppose sites that would threaten existing patterns of segregation.” Id. 624 F.Supp. at 1373.
- <sup>2</sup> “The UDC embarked on this task with enthusiasm, initially pushing for ‘scattered site’ housing throughout the City of Yonkers. For example, a list of possible sites referred by the UDC to City officials in June, 1969 contained eleven locations in different parts of the City. However, the UDC was soon made aware of strong local opposition to the building of subsidized housing in the predominantly white areas outside of Southwest Yonkers. The UDC clearly had at least some knowledge that this opposition was race-based. We find that the UDC, confronted with this race-based community opposition and concerned about the political feasibility of scattered-site housing, made a determination not to exercise its statutory override powers which would have enabled it to proceed without local approval.” United States v. City of Yonkers, 880 F.Supp. 212, 228 (S.D.N.Y.1995) (citations omitted).
- <sup>3</sup> State Defendants argued that UDC is not in a position to cure housing ills in Yonkers “[b]ecause the UDC was taken out of the housing business, it would not have funds available for new housing activities and it would not have staff with the expertise necessary to plan housing activities. The proposal that UDC should now plan housing assistance is thus meaningless.” (State Defs.’ Reply Mem. of 10/6/97, at 22 n. 7.)
